Highway crews spreading salt on interstates in eastern Pennsylvania made a grisly discovery Tuesday -- eight trash bags of body parts.

The bags were discovered at eight places along Interstate 80 and Interstate 380 in the Pocono Mountains, the Pocono Record reported. The first was discovered at about 9 a.m.

Lt. Robert Bartal said the bags were found along a five-mile stretch of I-80 and a 15-mile stretch of I-380. I-80 crosses the Poconos on its way from the George Washington Bridge to San Francisco, while I-380 branches off in the Poconos to Scranton, Pa.

Bartal said investigators believe all the parts were from a single body, probably a "light-skinned female." A head was found on I-380.

"We're not positive on the female portion of it at this point," he said.

I-380 was closed for several hours, causing massive traffic jams.

Police found human remains at the Interstate 80-380 junction in Jackson Township on Tuesday. Someone scattered the remains — including a severed head — in eight trash bags recovered at eight spots along the I-80-380 corridor through Monroe County and into Lackawanna County.

Keith R. Stevenson/Pocono Record

January 29, 2008

Someone scattered human remains — including a severed head — in trash bags along the Interstate 80-380 corridor through Monroe County and into Lackawanna County.

Police said eight bags at eight different locations have been recovered so far. They're not sure they have all of the remains.

The victim is believed to be a light-skinned adult woman, but police are not certain about the gender. An autopsy is scheduled for 9 a.m. Wednesday at Lehigh Valley Hospital Center.

Police don't know when the remains were dumped. PennDOT crews discovered the bags along Interstate 380 as they were out treating roads in preparation for freezing rain this morning.

Bags were found along both north and southbound lanes of 380, as well as east and westbound lanes of 80. Police extended their search along 80 in Carbon and Luzerne counties. Remains have only been found in Monroe and at one spot in Lackawanna County.

A head was recovered along I-380, said Monroe County District Attorney Dave Christine as he entered the Swiftwater state police barracks around 4 p.m.

The search for evidence continued until about 5:30 p.m. along Interstate 380 northbound at the Gouldsboro exit, where the highway leaves Monroe County and enters Lackawanna County.

Police recovered body parts near Stroudsburg at Exit 307 on Interstate 80, at the I-80-380 split and along Interstate 380 near Route 940.

TV crews and reporters converged at the Interstate 80-380 split near Mount Pocono around 1:45 p.m. where police covered something in the median with a yellow disposable blanket.

Interstate 380 was closed between Route 940 and Route 611 for about two hours this morning as police began their investigation.

A knife was found at the I-380-Route 940 interchange, but it is not known if that weapon is connected with the human remains.

A truck driver told the Pocono Record that he saw three tarps covering something along I-380 after police were called to the scene this morning.

The road closing caused major traffic backups on routes 611 and 940 in Mount Pocono.

I drove by this morning before cops arrived and saw road crew members standing by a trash bag with what appeared to be a arm sticking out. Pretty gruesome way to start my day.

I think everyone should be praying right now for the family of that poor deceased person. It could be some child's mom or dad, for God's sake. It was someone's loved one, and they don't need to be reading about arms hanging out. That is in such poor taste. Pray that the animal who did this gets their day in hell...

I don't know. Mountainmen aren't too big on dismemberment, hence it rarely if ever happens around here.

If you google New York and dismemberment you find alot of cases.

But you never know.

all they have to do is do a thorough autopsy. you can't cover up something like this no matter how hard you try. If you know how much stuff comes off our bodies just walking, skin cells, hair strands, clothing lent, etc....even if you use gloves. right after the autopsy they will know who she is, then start from the husband, boyfriend on down the list, phone records...etc. and why didn't anyone report her missing.....typical homicide situation seems like to me.

Yes, woman's head was apparently part of what turned up near the 80/380 split. That's how we understand it right now. More details coming soon. We're now fighting our software on top of everything else.

The details are a lot easier to read...Thanks for the link Editor1... Also heard that the body parts (10 bags, same body) were scattered in several places, as you say, on I-80E & W and 380 too...

This obviously is a display (driving around E&W, N&S,) of violent vengeance... and a message or cry out for help. The perpetrator will now have to be found and apprehended ASAP. Let's keep our eyes and ears open.

Very disturbing how it seems they were driving around here dumping the bags. Why here?

The one bag found in Stroudsburg could be a clue on them coming across the boarder and when they got far enough up 380, turned around and headed back.

Very disturbing.

Oh, yeah I do! Omg!! that was so scary back then....17 or so women....and if it wasn't for the due diligence of the police that night he would have never been caught. Rolled them up in a rug to conceal them. That's the scariest part.

That shocked even LI back then. I was about 25 then...I had a new baby! I was absolutely terrified that someone like that was roaming around 4 towns over from where I lived...Where we lived!!

I pray it's nothing like that magnitude...

You know where I'm talking about near JFK right? It was the side road leading from the Airport to Rockaway PKWY...major mob dumping ground!!

NO! do not go into it here. As it could compromise the case...

I'm just glad for people like you that have their eyes open and are willing to come forward..

This was someone's child once...That's the way I look at all these crimes. How could someone have gone so wrong to do this to someone else's child. No matter what they could have done NO ONE deserves that.

To the person who made the comment about, "getting hit by a truck?" Hellooo, read the distance... No truck did that, and besides parts were in bags. I think someone or a gang is sending a message to someone else or to the people of the poconos. They wanted those parts to be found for a reason. They could have just buried them in the woods or dumped them in garbage. They sure sent a message. We were discussing that scenario today.

So truckers just mow down folks and get away with it? What have you been dipping into? I travel the roads on average 40-50K per year from Maine to North Carolina (except when I'm on these forum pages, of course) in my car, and without a doubt truckers are the safest drivers...except Rt 80 from the GW bridge to the Rt 380 split...you know, those beat-up trucks from eastern NJ with the "municipal solid waste" sign on the front of the trailer...

Sniggles you are right, its not like the bags just fell out of the back of a truck, they wanted it to be found there are many places they could have been hid. Someone is making a statement. They are probably reading what we write. Just like the guy who admitted he read the forums after he hit and killed the motor cyclist. Mabey they were marking territory? Like a dog #### on a tree.

This is from WNEP story broadcast yesterday - Thursday, January 31, UDPATED: 5:37 p.m.
By Trish Hartman and Ryan Leckey

"Troopers are working on a sketch of the victim which should be released soon. In the meantime, anyone who may have seen anything suspicious in the area, even as far back as two or three weeks, is asked to call state police at Swiftwater at 570-839-7701."

They also mentioned that the parts may have been frozen. Being frozen will slow the rate of decomposition. Here is another theory - if the parts were frozen, was it by nature or by a freezer?

Not only is it winter, but the body was frozen. That has to screw up time of death. Not like they can do a liver temp. Ugh. I need a vacation. This whole thing is hideous.

Body Parts Found Along Pa. Highways

A woman's severed head was found Tuesday in a trash bag along an interstate highway, one of eight bags containing body parts discovered beside expressways in northeastern Pennsylvania, authorities said.

The parts are believed to belong to the same victim, and it was unclear whether all the body parts have been found, investigators said.

The first bag was found Tuesday morning near the Mount Pocono exit of Interstate 380 by a worker salting the highway, investigators said. More remains were found later Tuesday along I-80.

Authorities searched I-80 in four counties, state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

The woman's identity was not immediately known, and an autopsy was scheduled for Wednesday.

Body parts litter Interstate 80/380

At least eight bags of remains found; police shut highway to search

By BETH BRELJE
Pocono Record Writer

Police spent Tuesday in a gruesome search along two Pocono highways collecting at least eight bags of body parts scattered like trash.

"There were no attempts to hide anything," said state police Lt. Robert Bartal, explaining the bags were found close to the road, not hidden in the woods.

The recovery stretched from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro, spanning five miles of Interstate 80 and 15 miles of Interstate 380.

"There's still quite a bit (of the body) missing," Bartal said.

Police ask anyone who saw trash being dumped along the roads to call (570) 839-7701.

They believe the remains all belong to the same light-skinned victim, possibly a woman. An autopsy is scheduled for 9 a.m. today at Lehigh Valley Hospital in Allentown.

A torso was found in Lackawanna County and a head was recovered along I-380 in Monroe, according to Monroe County District Attorney David Christine. Most of the remains were found in Monroe County.

Police would not disclose what

Time to refinance?

Bad-news economy is good news for some homeowners

By HOWARD FRANK

Pocono Record Writer

Can there be a silver lining in the economic downturn? Perhaps. Sharp interest-rate cuts by the Federal Reserve make this a good time for homeowners to consider refinancing their mortgages.

Last week's cut of three quarters of a percentage point — with another cut of as much as a half point expected this week — has put interest rates at a two-year low and close to the lowest point they've been in this decade. Thirty-year mortgage rates are dropping below 5 percent.

But does that mean this a good time to refinance?

"If you have a 6.75, 7 or 7.5 percent rate, this could be a good time to refinance," according to John G. Gerlach, president and CEO of Pocono Community Bank.

"Anytime you have a 100 basis point spread, it's a good time to take a look at refinancing," he said. One hundred basis points is equal to one percentage point. The spread is the difference between a borrower's current mortgage rate and the new bank rate.

Gerlach said his bank is seeing an upswing in refinancing. "We are at the beginning of a trend towards refinancing, not just with residential mortgages, but with our commercial products as well," Gerlach said.

If homeowners want to figure out if it's worth refinancing, according to Gerlach, all that's required is a little simple math.

Just add up the total costs for a refinanced loan, including origination fees, attorney's fees and so forth. Then divide that by the difference in the monthly payments to determine how many months it will take before you break even on the new rate.

So, if your closing costs are $2,000 and you would pay $100 a month less with a new rate, it will take you 20 months to break even on a loan. With 10, 20 or 30 years left, that's a relatively short break-even.

GERLACH EXPLAINED two reasons for the Fed's reduction in rates that began late last summer. "One was the mortgage meltdown. The other was that banks didn't want to lend funds to each other. They weren't sure what exposure the borrowing bank may have had to bad loans. There was a real liquidity problem," Gerlach said.

"With the Fed's drop in rates, current rates have dropped below 5 percent for a 30-year fixed rate," according to George Hanzimanolis of Tannersville, president of Bankers First Mortgage and National Association of Mortgage Brokers president. Compared to last year, when rates were closer to 6 percent, that's quite a difference, he said.

And that means that someone with a $250,000 home might save between $100 to $125 a month, according to Hanzimanolis.

Although there are typically closing fees with a refinancing, Hanzimanolis said borrowers can finance those too by incorporating them into the loan.

"What customers should do is go into whatever lending firm they use and ask for a good faith estimate of closing costs. That will give them a breakdown of all the costs in the transaction and what their payment will be," he said. And that good faith estimate, by law, will include insurance and taxes. The mortgage provider is required to supply the estimate within 72 hours if the borrower submits a loan application.

Gary Olson, president and CEO of ESSA Bancorp, parent of ESSA Bank & Trust, said his refinancing business is picking as well. "It could very well be advantageous to refinance, depending on what your current rate is."

According to Olson, early in 2003, rates hit the bottom of the mortgage rate cycle, but they are nearing that level again.

"Most folks are concerned with their monthly cash flows and whether there's an opportunity to improve it. ESSA has mortgage loan specialists who consumers can call to discuss refinancing. It doesn't cost them anything. It's a service we provide," Olson said.

Why would a bank offer to reduce a customer's loan rate? Because it's good business. "Our main business is getting people in their homes. If it means offering better financing, so be it," he said.

confident all the bags have been found.

The first discovery was made at 9:07 a.m. Tuesday. A Pennsylvania Department of Transportation crew treating roads in preparation for freezing rain discovered the first bag in Coolbaugh Township at mile marker 4.1 on Interstate 380. The bag was in the median. When the PennDOT crew realized they had found human remains, state police at Swiftwater were contacted.

Interstate 380 was closed in both directions and traffic was detoured to routes 940 and 611 for hours while police searched the area.

More than 25 officers were used in the search. Police were seen wearing gloves and going through bags of trash along the interstate.

Body parts were found in Coolbaugh, Pocono, Tobyhanna and Stroud townships and Stroudsburg Borough in Monroe County and Covington Township in Lackawanna County.

On northbound I-380, bags were found in the median area at mile markers, 0.4, 4.1, 5.2, 5.6, 14.4 and the southbound ramp at mile marker 7.5.

More were found on eastbound I-80 at mile marker 294.8, and westbound I-80 at mile marker 306.6.

Police said "at least one bag" was found at each of the locations.

A truck driver told the Pocono Record he saw three tarps covering something along I-380 Tuesday morning before police closed the interstate. A knife was found at the Interstate 380/Route 940 interchange, but it is not known if that weapon is connected with the human remains.

County Jail without bail or bond while Nguyen is free. Kong, Alisaito and Ko will appear in federal court Feb. 26 to change their "not guilty" pleas to "guilty," Fisanick said. Lim's and Nguyen's cases are still pending.

The five were charged in connection with the June 20 arrests of 81 undocumented immigrants at Iridium, which makes plastic squeeze tubes for L'Oreal, Victoria's Secret and other clients. The immigrants came from Mexico, Ecuador, Indonesia and Malaysia, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials said.

Iridium claimed it didn't know the workers were undocumented, but former employees, such as Dorothy Crespo of Stroud Township, said the company knowingly employed the immigrants in sweatshop conditions.

The June raid's focus was H&T Services, also known as H&T Time Services, a Wilkes-Barre temporary employment agency that supplied the workers to Iridium, Fisanick said.

Nguyen created H&T in 2002 and entered into a contract with Iridium in January 2003.

On at least three occasions between January and May 2007, Nguyen, Lim, Kong, Alisaito and Ko drove the undocumented immigrants in vans to work at Iridium, Fisanick charged.

Monroe County attorney Ysabel Williams represented some of the 81 people arrested in June, but cannot recall the

Is waterboarding torture? Atty. Gen. won't tell Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Michael Mukasey said Tuesday he will refuse to publicly say whether the interrogation tactic known as waterboarding is illegal, digging in against critics who want the Bush administration to define it as torture.

In a letter to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, Mukasey said he has finished a review of Justice Department memos about the CIA's current methods of interrogating terror suspects and finds them to be lawful. He said waterboarding currently is not used by the spy agency.

Since waterboarding is not part of what Mukasey described as a "limited set of methods" used by interrogators now, the attorney general said he would not rule on whether it is illegal.

"I understand that you and some other members of the (Judiciary) Committee may feel that I should go further in my review, and answer questions concerning the legality of waterboarding under current law," Mukasey wrote in his three-page letter to Leahy, D-Vt. "I understand the strong interest in this question, but I do not think it would be responsible for me, as attorney general, to provide an answer."

The attorney general added: "If this were an easy question, I would not be reluctant to offer my views on this subject. But, with respect, I believe it is not an easy question. There are some circumstances where current law would appear clearly to prohibit the use of waterboarding. Other circumstances would present a far closer question."

The letter does not elaborate on what the other circumstances are.

Mukasey's letter was sent on the eve of his appearance at a Justice Department oversight hearing chaired by Leahy. It is Mukasey's first appearance before the committee since he took office Nov. 9.

In a terse statement released minutes after Mukasey's letter surfaced, Leahy called the attorney general's position a "last minute response" that merely parrots the Bush administration's longtime dodge on whether waterboarding is legal.

"It does not, however, answer the critical questions we have been asking about its legality," Leahy said in the statement. "Attorney General Mukasey knows that this will not end the matter and expects to be asked serious questions at the hearing tomorrow."

• U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement doesn't release the names of those it arrests, due to privacy laws.

• It would take too many man-hours to track down each and every one of those 81 cases, man-hours for which the cost to the agency would have to be justified.

"It's a staggering amount of work to follow each person's name through the system to find out the status of each case," said Immigration spokesman Michael Gilhooly of the Vermont office, which covers the Northeastern states. "It just wouldn't be practical."

As of the time of the June raid, Iridium reportedly had not been charged with any wrongdoing and had received more than $9 million in public assistance since it opened in 1999.

Police spent Tuesday in a gruesome search along two Pocono highways collecting at least eight bags of body parts scattered like trash.

"There were no attempts to hide anything," said state police Lt. Robert Bartal, explaining the bags were found close to the road, not hidden in the woods.

The recovery stretched from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro, spanning five miles of Interstate 80 and 15 miles of Interstate 380.

"There's still quite a bit (of the body) missing," Bartal said.

Police ask anyone who saw trash being dumped along the roads to call (570) 839-7701.

They believe the remains all belong to the same light-skinned victim, possibly a woman. An autopsy is scheduled for 9 a.m. today at Lehigh Valley Hospital in Allentown.

A torso was found in Lackawanna County and a head was recovered along I-380 in Monroe, according to Monroe County District Attorney David Christine. Most of the remains were found in Monroe County.

Police would not disclose what other parts were found, but did say they were all recognizable human remains. They would not say if clothing or other items were found in any of the bags. They did say it is obviously a homicide investigation.

Police were not certain how long it had been since the remains were discarded, and they are not confident all the bags have been found.

The first discovery was made at 9:07 a.m. Tuesday. A Pennsylvania Department of Transportation crew treating roads in preparation for freezing rain discovered the first bag in Coolbaugh Township at mile marker 4.1 on Interstate 380. The bag was in the median. When the PennDOT crew realized they had found human remains, state police at Swiftwater were contacted.

Interstate 380 was closed in both directions and traffic was detoured to routes 940 and 611 for hours while police searched the area.

More than 25 officers were used in the search. Police were seen wearing gloves and going through bags of trash along the interstate.

Body parts were found in Coolbaugh, Pocono, Tobyhanna and Stroud townships and Stroudsburg Borough in Monroe County and Covington Township in Lackawanna County.

On northbound I-380, bags were found in the median area at mile markers, 0.4, 4.1, 5.2, 5.8, 14.4 and the southbound ramp at mile marker 7.5.

More were found on eastbound I-80 at mile marker 294.8, and westbound I-80 at mile marker 306.6.

Police said "at least one bag" was found at each of the locations.

A truck driver told the Pocono Record he saw three tarps covering something along I-380 Tuesday morning before police closed the interstate. A knife was found at the Interstate 380/Route 940 interchange, but it is not known if that weapon is connected with the human remains.

Yes it is really bad around here, but believe me it's like this in alot of places. This is what happens when you have an Interstate running through your area, Scum from other areas use this like a dumping ground. Chances are this person isn't even from this area. I pray for her soul. To the individual who did this : May your soul burn in hell!

I agree with you kushman. I commute to the Bronx several times per week to help my sick parent. I probably have driven past the "bags" several times. I even remember seeing something (going up route 380 to get off at 940) thought I was going nuts but re-assured myself things like that (body parts on a median) are a product of my imagination. I saw a large black bag ripped open on top sitting on the yellow line left side of the highway by median too! It was strange because road crews that clean up sometimes leave white bags (smaller) on the right side for pick up. I hope New Jersey police are checking route 80, this is a horrendous crime. My thoughts & prayers are with the victim's family- "God don't make garbage"

When you tell people at work from outside the Poconos what goes on up here, they are shocked because of all the brain washing going on in the TV Media in the cities. Wow, I bet the new head of the Tourist Agency wishes he had stayed out West now. But then again it will never make National News, maybe Scranton or Wilkes-Barre. Did anyone see it on National news or the Men in Black get out in time to cover it up.

I have friends that live in the Adirondacks, and - surprise! - the crime is moving up there too. I spent a lot of time in the Poconos as a kid, and yes, it's changed here. But at the same time, you have to realize that no matter where you go, things will have changed. With our proximity to New York, New Jersey, and Philadelphia, it was bound to happen. And it's probably true the the poor woman may not even be from the area. And the odds are that whoever did this isn't from here, either. The interstates are a convenient place to dump all kinds of things, including body parts. And if you move north, or west, or wherever, it will catch up with you eventually.

It's horrible, and I pray for the woman and her family.

I remember when I first started going to the Poconos to race back in the early 1980's. I thought to myself, "boy this would be a nice place to build an A-frame on a lake and retire". What a difference almost 20 years makes. Now we have body parts being strewn on interstates, illegal aliens transporting drugs to and from NYC, cop killers taking refuge in the woods, hunters being gunned down, people being run over in the middle of Rt. 115, arsonists in Stroudsburg, Idiots who kill dogs and cats without thinking twice, and judges who let them walk. Not to mention the ever popular Rainbow! Nice area, but I think I've had a change in plans.

Listen,

If everyone does their part by sending all these problem stories to other media outlets around the country, particularly, NY and NJ....

We can take the money right out of developers hands. They still tout the area as a tourist, retirement, recreational, QUIET, PEACEFUL, wilderness area. What a joke! The Pocono tourist agency is no better, as they push advertising in all directions. This place sucks anymore and unless we tell our stories, more and more city people with all of their problems, sickos, thieves, killer, etccc... will continue to come here.
TELL THE WORLD WHAT HAS HAPPENED IN THE POCONOS!

Everyone on this forum "g1234" complains consistantly about this area and the "horrible" changes we are enduring. I agree with you; why doesn't someone from this forum start an organization that will fund a campaign to run advertisements in every-single newspaper that hits the Jersey/NY market in OPPOSITION to the "pocono american dream". Build your DREAM here? Build your SCREAM here!! This isn't Mayberry anymore!! Before "good" hard working people from "WHEREVER" come here to commute 20 hours a week, they deserve to be well-informed. Friends from NY and NJ "STAY WHERE YOU ARE---THIS IS THE CITY WITH A FEW MORE TREES...THAT'S ALL"!! Friends from the Poconos...get a gun permit.

Let me get this right....we should spread the word of how awful it is here to keep all the city folk, etc. AWAY from the area? Murders, havens for illegals aliens, robbery, rape, child abuse...you name it; it goes on...everywhere. Advertising our adversities is good for public awareness and assistance, but it also sends out a message that this is normal behavior....which by all means this act is not. Birds of a feather, so to speak. The healthiest thing that could happen around this area would be for people to knock down their walls, gather strength in their communities by talking with each other and keeping an eye on what goes on in the neighborhood. Most criminals do not like to be watched.

This is so normal with a population surge such as we've been experiencing... When so many people are living in a small area, there are bound to be good living alongside bad. It's not a matter of where they're coming from or what ethnic group they belong to. It's human nature. Be thankful that all of you posting are not like that, it shows there are good people left in the world.

But like most folks have said, it's probably not even someone from around here. Seems more like a crime to send a message to someone, maybe even mafia related.

But why run from here? We can use the good people in order to help fix the problem. If someone came into your home, would you flee and let them have it or would you stand your ground and fight? Running is not a solution.

Can't fix the problem because the politicians never speak out about any crime in the area, remember it doesn't exist. If they had recognize there is a problem their employers, the builders and real estate agents would have to fire him or her. Do you ever see any of them come on any TV station that can go National and say we have a serious crime and drug problem in the Poconos?

Now before everyone starts heading for the hills, take a moment. We don't know where the homicide took place, it could have been done anywhere, not necessarily here. Who knows, could have happened in MD and the perp is fleeing north or where ever, and maybe figured they'd dump stuff as they ran.

Don't put your "for sale" signs out until they find out exactly what happened.

Its a horrible thing that's happened. I have family as far north as the border of Canada and you can be sure, it's all over. It's not just here. You'd be hard pressed to find a place that's not been affected by something similar. We don't see or hear about all of the crime that takes place across the US, remember that.

I hope they're able to find the family of this poor woman and that they're able to find the slime that did this to her.

This news story is already out there in the world, go check out other news web sites. Sending stories out accomplishes what? 15 minutes of fame? Is this what you want to be remembered for? A human being was mutilated and you want to turn this into a NY/NJ bashing event, just like every other story on these forums. GIVE IT A REST already. Focus on the article at hand. A savage event just took place. If you can't help out, then get out of the way.

But we want all news to get out to make sure the truth gets out. Like I stated in another forum yesterday if they printed all the photos of suspects or convicted criminals in the area they would have to put out a Sunday edition for a week.

The desired effect of pushing the real stories of the Poconos to other media outlets is to Limit, Stop, etc... the flow of more further development of areas of the Poconos. "You can only put so much S#*T in a bucket before it overflows." To much overcrowding leads to the problems we have here. The ironic thing is that Tourist agencies, developers, etc... continue to mega-advertise the area for development. Unless someone pushes back - the money mongers will take advantage of this area. "Whatever the Market will Stand" is the motto of these mongers. SO LETS NOT STAND FOR IT ANYMORE! Tell everyone, send your emails to the Tourist Agencies, Newspapers, TV stations, Radio Stations, etc... Let them know how the quality of life has deteriorated in the Poconos.

I thought the bags along the roadside were left by cleanup crews also. Maybe Monroe County should think about giving the clean up crews clear bags for debris rather than black ones. This is not about NY/NJ, its about the underlying problems of the area. They ALL can be tied back to the "Fleeing of the Poconos". It just so happens that the mass exodus occurred from NY/NJ areas. We can not just be addressing individual "fires and putting them out one by one", we have to address the underlying reasons for them. That is overcrowding, over development, over advertising, leading to more crime, over crowding in schools, more corruption, deteriorating infrastructure, etc... Everything we do not want to happen. So either sit back and do nothing OR See what you can do by using every means possible to STOP the fleeing of the area! I choose the later!

This is an unspeakable crime and Kitten is right it could of came from anywhere. Whatever monster did this just chose to dump her in the Poconos. That stretch of highway is pretty secluded at dark time meaning not easily seen it is also travelled by many including trucks. Lets not bash States here and where people come from and focus on an innocent victim who has lost her life in a horrific way.

The Politicians need to be put on the spot,

The politicians and city leaders are put on the spot in Newark and NYC, people want answers. The leaders up here never have to respond to anything until its election time where they say will look into it. I would be nice for a National TV Network to come in and hound our famous leaders for answers but I am sure they would face the camera's.

People want to feel safe, people want roads to handle the overpopulation and we need a bigger presence of law enforcement.

Plus when a criminal is sentenced and its seems like a slap on the wrist a Judges recorded should be posted and investigated for any special interests.

Guess what ? Statistics show a lot of murders happen in PA. And guess what else, most of these murders are not done by people who have come from the city, they are done by the people of PA. Do your research. It is so sad how so many out there try to divide the Poconos people when tragedy hits rather than unite and stand together. This is such a horrible story and so many of you are selfishly trying to turn it into prejudice slander without even knowing the facts...

Stop speculating as to where this woman was murdered and mutilated and that it was some person from NY/NJ. This crime could have happened anywhere. Ohio, Virginia or right here in the Poconos. This is just where the criminal decided to drop the parts. Grow up, get a life and get over yourselves. Being a "local" does not make you special or excluded. I can only hope that this woman is able to be identified and that they can prosecute the maniac who did this.

Yes it is true, this crime could have been done anywhere. And the fact is that it was done by a sick individual(s). It is so close minded to blame a particular city or tourist attraction for this tragedy when we all know there are sick people from every corner of the world. No matter where you come from and no matter where you choose to live you have to fear for your safety and that is the problem at hand. Much of crime stems from hatred and prejudice and that is the mentality that needs to be changed, rather than who moves into what area.

The discussion is associated with to many people (from anywhere, USA) are being lured and crammed into the Poconos! Its obvious this tradjedy could have happened anywhere, and the body ended up here.

Its also obvious that the flow of people (from ANYWHERE, USA) must stop!

Do not take it out of context!

Really????? Wasn't there just a huge feature in the PR about an unsolved murder case from say 40 years ago???? a family homicide I think...anyway, it has always happened and probably always will.

The important thing that people should be concerned about is that this person might be right under there nose and they not even know it, also i think what's most important is finding the rest of this lady's body parts so that she can be identified and hopefully finding who murdered her so that her soul can rest and her family can began the healing process. Crime has existed throughout time. Everyone, no matter where they come from can probably say there was less crime years ago. The fact is that the population of cities and countries all around the world is growing, the Poconos is not going to be excluded from that. It is unrealistic to want that. The solution is not to stop population it is to start raising our children in loving households and environments. Most of the time the sick people who commit horrific crimes had terrible abusive childhoods. Many people who come here from cities, I like to think come here for a better life for their families.

My prayers go out to the family of this poor soul that lost her life so violently. As for the person (s) that performed this crime; I would say oops they ran when I went to arrest them. Bang, gone, one less to worry about. Like I said this person should be the example along with Olmeda-Pagan and a few others that thought about taking another persons life and did so without a blink of an eye. I sure don't want to pay for this dirt bag the rest of my life. As far as the Pocono's being no longer the Country, well as for me No it is not and I would love to find another peaceful place to live. Not saying in time that wouldn't change but it would not be as bad as here. I would also find a place that would take 20+ years or more to get this way. Hopefully it will be way past my life expectancy. But to someone that lives in the Bronx or Harlem any big city for that matter; then yes this is country and peaceful. Now with the Casino's popping up imagine what scum will be in the area from ALL OVER, if not already. Think about it, the owner is already under investigation for lying. It will get like Atlantic City where people are #### in the parking lots when they get out of the cars. Take a good smell when you first step out of your car in one of those parking garages. Capital punishment, back in the olden days you stole you were hung, in other countries you take a life yours will be taken. Look at their crime rates. Hummm, consequences, that is non existent in our Country for harsh crime. The victim is no longer so their rights are left for the family and friends to defend. Now for the scum that did it, the law WILL protect them, like always. Where was the law for this poor woman? You can only blame so much on upbringing. There have been many that were from good loving homes that took the wrong path and there have been many that have had an abusive life and turned it around so there children do not live that pain. The bottom line is we all get to an age where we know life vs. death, bad vs. good, right from wrong and know the meaning of both words. It is our destinies that we choose by our choices we make in OUR LIVES AS ADULTS. THERE ARE NO CONSEQUENCES.

This is just an opinion and a statistic, take it however you want... I lived in east burg for 20yrs. none of the #### that has happened in the past few yrs. happened in those 20yrs that I was there! Most things were fine until 9/11, thats when some people from larger cities moved to PA. That brought a lot of felons, problems with our shools because of there kids being raised different than our kids, higher taxes, property prices, less game land, drug problems, and crime of all sorts, including this! Honestly, look in this news papers history at how many out of staters committed crime on locals compared to locals committing crime! No matter how you look at it people from out of state are bringing their problems to our state and town and it just so happens to be mostly from NY! There's your statistic, sad but true!

I really have to put it out there that this is a great big reason why I - when I can safely- go out of my way to avoid hitting bags or boxes or sheets that are laying in the road. In all honesty I just always think their might be an animal in there or glass, but this is a strak reminder it could be something worse.

There is no perfect place out there, if there was I am sure all of us on this sight now would be there. We all have one thing in common, that we feel this was a horrible crime. Our speculations may differ, but the fact is that we all care enough that we do not want these things happening. Everyone out there is entitled to their beliefs, but that is not going to change the fact that there was this horrific event here.

40 years ago the body wasn't cut up and scattered like trash on the highway. 40 years ago people left their front doors unlocked. 40 years ago, there were no developers building half a$$ed houses every place they could. 40 years ago we had this town the way it should have stayed. If you don't like it, pack your stuff and head back to the city, and take the rest of the garbage with you.

I was born here, raised here, and my family name goes back over two hundred years in the Poconos. I remember the pride in downtown, before the mall, before the developers, and before the city people. My ancestors came here after the Indians were "killed". That was then, this is now. Do you want to start making comparisons of the "Indians" and start blaming me for the slavery that took place in this country before either of us was born?

40 YEARS AGO!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

NOT EVERY DAY!

Please g. This crime is bad and very sad but this doesn't happen every day here. And for what it's worth, we had a local dismemberment killing just 2 or 3 years ago, a Cain/Abel situation. I think the murderer was an EMT from Mt. Bethel. So anyone that thinks this could never be the work of a local is just plain crazy.

Whoever did this crime wants to be caught judging from the blatant disposal of the body. I wouldn't be surprised if he/she is reading these forums and loving the attention. I'm done commenting on this crime for that reason.

I hope the victim is identified so her family can properly grieve for her. And may the killer rot in hell, the sooner the better.

""No matter how you look at it people from out of state are bringing their problems to our state and town and it just so happens to be mostly from NY! There's your statistic, sad but true!"

Sure. But let's look at the other statistic, the one that drives this one: Most of the people in the Poconos now aren't from the Poconos, so logically speaking the number of people committing crimes in the Poconos would have a higher proportion of move-ins than 40 years ago. 40 years ago most of the crime in the Poconos was committed by locals; does that in itself make a condemning statement about locals?

The real value-laden statistic is whether Monroe County has a higher crime rate than any other county of 165,000 people. Our preliminary research says it does not, that you need to go no farther than Scranton, for instance, to find a higher crime rate. HOWEVER the state statistics on this depend on accurate and timely record-keeping by police in every jurisdiction. If the information doesn't get sent to the central record-keeping location, it might as well not exist.

Trying to nail all this down -- not just finding the statistics, but attempting to determine their real validity -- is making us nuts, but we're chipping away at it.

You must also consider that we put more resources into crime stories now than we did, say, five years ago, because of reader surveys showing it to be of tremendous interest to our viewers and subscribers. Daily feedback on numbers on our Web site confirms the interest: The smallest story about the most inane crime gets more viewers, for instance, than a story about kids winning awards, fundraisers for sick widows, sports stories or editorials about local issues. So we can say conclusively we are reporting more crime than five years ago. It may not be for sure because there is a huge amount of new crime.

The increasing interest in crime stories makes a lot of sense: A lot of new arrivals moved here to get away from crime. They are somewhat anxious, intrigued or at least interested when it turns out you can't avoid it. The tone of disappointment is quite apparent even on these forums, if you can dive below the transplant vs local noise.

The real problem though is the lack of planning by our elected officials. They weren't ready for this population explosion. Was it a surprise that hit like a bomb - or was it like a bathtub with running water and our officials were busy frying bacon on the stove, and forgot all about the bathwater until it started coming through the kitchen ceiling. The greater problem now is that if we don't get up to speed and plan for the future with united officials, we are really going to be screwed 5 or 10 years down the road. I sort of doubt our local officials have the vision or wherewithal to turn it around. Have you met Suzanne McCool? Nice Lady and all, but lacking the backbone to get the job done. She is just one example.

I sometimes have a thought that local officials figured that so long as all this development was taking place behind gated private communities, it was "whatever," with no realization of the impact. Remember, a great many were launched as places for second homes and have now converted over to permanent residences. It's easy to covet second home development if you're a municipality: Adds to the ratable base without much demand on services. Like Jersey shore towns that are empty in December, 80 percent of the buildings unoccupied for nine months of the year but generating property taxes all 12 months.

Now fill those homes up for all 12 months and see what happens. That's at least part of what happened here. The aggravation and traffic that was ok for two months of the year, and acceptable, is now 12 months and unacceptable.

I agree with you eyethere. If there were bags on both sides of the highways, someone made a u-turn and went back in the same direction they came from. And yes, there had to be at least 2 people.

Possibly. That is kind of going off the deep end with it. Crazy, disturbing murders happen all the time. Most have root causes not associated with someone trying to send a "very clear threat" to the community.

This seems a little like the "Beth Doe" case that resurfaced recently. Though that person was actually trying to dispose of the body in a place it wouldn't be found, rather than leave it along a highway.

It is the guns that your ancestors brought to the Poconos that has killed so many. The innocence was gone years ago. Your pride in the Poconos is for something you are a part of, not own. Crazy disturbing murders do happen all the time, and the vast majority of the perpetrators at least attempt to hide the evidence, or worse keep it for dinner. It's pretty rare that someone actually advertises it and throws evidence where it can't possibly be missed, which is why I think it was done on purpose. Seems like a whole lot of trouble to place it out in the open in multiple places... like whoever it was wanted to be sure it wasn't missed. Seems like a pretty clear form of communication to me.

I've been waiting for more information before I posted.

If it were the mafia, fingers and heads are usually missing so the body is difficult to ID. If it was a gang, tattoos will ID the victim and it will easily be traced to a gang affiliation. Crimes of passion usually don't involve dismemberment. Unless the perp is truly deranged.

Clearly it was someone who is familiar enough with the area to know a time and place to dump the bags.

A local would probably have a much more secretive place to dump the body.

So, I'm banking on an out-of-towner who at least visits the area.

PA native, you are right about the fingers, but the head does not necessarily have to be missing, just the teeth. Tattoos can also be removed.

I am reluctant to theorize too much, but I sure hope it's not someone who is truly deranged, because if that turns out to be the case, it may lead to other victims, both past and future.

If someone wanted to send a message to one person or a small group with a murder they could have done it more effectively 101 other ways. Why send a message to a single person by dumping body parts all over an Interstate? Why not leave the body parts on a small road near the persons house. It just seems to me if it was directed at a person/persons it could have been done numerous other, more effective ways.

I'm sure the Delaware water gap are looking at the tapes of pick-ups, vans or anything else suspicious coming from NJ.

I'm sure PA's finest already have the situation under control. They are the best!!!

milo,

I hardly watch any TV. The "real" detectives are great people doing a difficult job. I'm speculating that's all, like most people on the PR forums.

It doesn't get deeper then that.

Its a little presumptuous of you to tell me I'm doing something wrong, yet everyone else on this forum is speculating just like me.

Don't you think?

Where it came from we don't know, and who can say? I have lived here for five years now, moved from the shore area of N.J. Sometimes I do feel there is more crime here than there was there, but then again there's less POLICE here, than was there. It's really everywhere, no matter where you go, but this one I AGREE IS GRISSLY.

It's happening everywhere....the pregnant marine, the girl snatched off her friends couch in CA, a baby in a car seat tossed out in Galveston....everywhere you look there's crime. There's crime and then there's CRIME. Cutting someone to pieces is CRIME. It's disgusting, and it does make me think that the Pocono's might not be as safe as we'd all like to think. We need to remember too...80 and 380 are Interstate hwys....same as 78, Garden State Parkway, Turnpike and others....and there have been times when things were found on those as well BECAUSE they were Interstate...easy access for anyone-no matter where they were from, to travel them. How do we know this woman wasn't trucked in here by some trucker who cut her up in Utah for instance and waited till he got far enough East? We don't know.

As for the PA states....well, they aren't CSI as one of them told my friend while she was in tears when her home was burglarized, but they are adequate. Besides.....because it's an interstate highway and if and when they determine the person came from another state...the Feds will be called in. No worry.

THE WORLD HAS GONE TO HELL IN A HAND BUCKET.

I agree Sniper, but...this handywork was no teenager. This is some cold calculated SOB with a hate for women on his mind. Profilers will be brought in...I too don't think this will be left to PSP.....the fact that it's an Interstate Highway leads me to believe that the Feds have already been called in.

As for PSP and what people say about them....we all need to remember that everyone is entitled to their opinion and police protection because we are taxpayers....we have the first amendment and the constitution, B) some who have lived here have had bad experiences with SOME of them, not all of them. Some that I have met have been very good men...then some others have left alot to be desired even in the people skills area. I also agree that "some of them" don't represent the Mass of them, but it's not a good feeling sometimes dealing with them. Then there are other times when you do feel like they have your interest at heart, so I can see both sides of the issue. The real problem is that there aren't enough of them, and the ones we do have are tired, stretched and worn thin. In the West End I have been told by the Lehigh Barracks that there's one squad car to patrol 60 miles at night. God forbid there are more than two emergencies at one time. Of course...this opens up a whole new can of worms because people don't want to pay higher taxes for more police coverage and Rendell doesn't want to address the issue (this was said to me by a State Trooper here)...so it's a catch 22-but I'll tell you it doesn't make me feel any safer. There have been some pretty big cases up this way-double murder, woman who killed her children by setting the house on fire, and other bad crimes.....at time's it isn't very safe. Politicians (Mike Carrol) promised better....yeah....nothing happened. It's the same old again and again. Then when something happens and you need to deal with one of the Troopers...they have a nasty attitude because they are overworked and tired.

I've also been told that they were initially hired to do Highway Patrol only but because of the population explosion in these parts they have to do it all. It's not fair on both sides of the isle. I say let the Feds handle this one because that's less our Troopers have to do. Just my opinion of course, which again we are all entitled to under the first amendment.

IT STILL creeps me out that this has happened here.

3 or 4 Friday nights ago, at approximately 9:30 pm, I stopped at the Pennmart on Rte 198 and I think all of PMRPD was there drinking coffee. Maybe not donuts, but they were drinking coffee. There were 4 or 5 officers all together. Isn't that the whole shift???? And right outside, when I was getting in my car, someone illegally dumped garbage. So yeah, sometimes cops do hang out and eat donuts/drink coffee. All at the SAME TIME.

Agreed. It's just not a stereotypical gang related kind of crime. I did see something recently about how MS-13 has killed in gruesome fashion with machetes. Aside from that I know very little about MS-13 and don't think they have much of a presence around here.

The great thing about this post is everyone has the "low" percentage argument they use to make a 100% of their case.

On 1 friday evening, at 9:30pm???

What about the other 10,079 in the rest of that week? What were they doing during those times?

Hold the serial killer thought we haven't seen any other killings such as this yet in the area.

I agree.

I think it was an out-of-towner for the same reason. A local would have had that knowledge.

An over the road trucker wouldn't care, dump and leave you'll be out of town before the bags were found.

I go to resident gang guy..

cali- Is this an MO of any gangs you know of? Kill and cut up, leave to be found in order to send a message to others?

"...except most serial killers are very particular with their victims in the way they kill, maim, or whatever. Serial killers are rare, but a serial killer who throws pieces of his victims along the highway in trash bags? The odds have to be against that one I would guess."

The thing is...most of these types of crimes are serial killers. Spouses, lovers, etc may cut off a head or something but they usually want to hide the body to cover their azz...serial killers want to show off their work....hense chopping her up and putting her out for all to see....from what I am reading..

I dont know. The only thing I'll put money on is that it's a white male.

Chris, good points. I guess we will just to be patient and wait for some news... I sure hope they find this guy though. It would just be awful if it went unsolved. I guess there's no word on the autopsy or identity of the victim yet, but I kinda figured it wouldn't be that easy.

Rebecca - I hope they find him as well. To think he could be scouting out another woman right now (for whatever reason).

Another thing that is weighing on my mind is the fact that she could be someone I know. Someone any of us know. I'm sure she has friends and family. I feel so bad for her family because they don't even know she's dead yet.

FYI - Don't remember who posted it but.....us "volunteer litter control" folks are not 'allowed' on the highway.

Well I read alot of the posts all day. Lets not go with the local verses out of towners. We have a body. This crime scene is probably ALOT bigger than the eye meets. So everyone that are putting down PSP,PMRPD, or any other police, try putting their boots on and try it. Everyone praised ALL police involved when they caught the 2 cop killers from NY back a few months. I know Alot of the guys in blue and they work very hard doing what they do, don't complain if you see them having a coffee. Sometimes they don't get the hour breaks that you 9-5 people get. Plus you think you have paper work, try again, theirs HAS to be done by shifts end, not I will do it in the morning. So while everyone is sitting there watching CSI, it does not happen in an hour! I know some people that take 2 hours to watch 60 minutes!

Don't fret over what people say about Police. Most people are Monday morning quarterbacks. Talk is cheap. Until you step a mile in their shoes....

Hopefully this one will be solved , and the people or person will pay dearly!!!!

Since obviously you care about your fellow man why not join up and serve the community asd a police officer?

The great thing about this post is everyone has the "low" percentage argument they use too make a 100% of their case.

On 1 friday evening, at 9:30pm???

What about the other 10,079 in the rest of that waek? What we're they doing during those times?"

I don't know if it was a shift change. where I used to live, the shifts were 8-4, 4-12, 12-8. So, I don't know. My point is.....with all the garbage that happens on that mountain, all of our local police shouldn't be taking a coffee break at the same time. That's all I'm saying. But when you get free coffee.....

And from what I understand, that happens at Pennmart alot.

I had the opportunity to meet a State police friend of mine at a local diner for breakfast. The table in back of us were 10 troopers in different states of "coming, going, working OT" and discussing a tie-in of events for that day. Trouble spots to watch, daily arrests/warrants and such. All were eating breakfast. Some on duty, some off, some pulling OT, some taking a car home because they were working rolling 12 hour days to minimize coverage gaps.

Policing is NOT 9-5 with standard breaktimes. These guys bust there AS$$e$ dealing with the worst of humanity, all to have the "taxpayer" question why there are a "number of them" gathering and drinking coffee?

I don't know who you are but you certainly don't have any Police or Firemen friends or maybe you would have a clue as to what these fine men and woman do for our community 24/7. If the "S" hits the fan at your house and they save your bacon, maybe you'll offer to buy them a cup of coffee at the pennmart.

The only way this situation could be any more awful than it already is, is 1) if they can't ID this poor girl, and 2) if this case is never solved. Let me just quote Dr. Phil "the best predictor of future behavior is PAST behavior". Anyone who is capable of such horrific violence will most likely act again someday, and it's like a lot of other things, gets easier every time.

I can't tell you how many messages I have received the last couple days checking in and how upset people got when I didn't answer right away. I had someone cross my mind as well, and even though I knew my imagination was running wild I was relieved when a description was released that didn't match my fears. Someone knows her though and it won't be easy when they find out. Heartbreaking to be sure...

Not for nothing but that guy was not a local either! And at the time it was the most horrible crime that had happened in the burgs, and then there was years without something that bad happening, that is until the owner of the bottom of the fox being brutally murdered. We did not have murders in Monroe County when I was a kid.

Just for the heck of it.....how many of us out there are 5th generation locals or more????

Look everyone, this isn't or shouldn't be a local or transplant issue. My bet is yeah, this happened across the bridge somewhere and then the remains was driven here. This poor person died a horrific death, and that is what this should be about. I can't even begin to imagine the torture she must have gone through. I hope to hell they catch who ever did this terrible thing. I also hope that they can figure out who this poor woman is so that she can be laid in her final resting place as someone other than another Jane Doe. My heart goes out to her and her family. I pray that she now has peace because she obviously left this world in so much pain.

I was just visiting Greenjean's widow today--she lives at Saylor's lake. I knew Joubert well, and that was a tragedy of the worst sort. Poor guy never did anything but good.

editor1 wants to know if we have more crime than other counties of 165 thou....first of all, that number is certainly wrong....I bet a dollar we have busted 180---and maybe more like 200 thou.

I don't know if you need to know about other counties. Violent crime and crimes against property are at their lowest since 1985 or something like that, something like a 50% decrease from 40 to 20 per hundred thou for both.

Even if our population only quarupled in that time (about right, I think) crime should have "only" doubled according to those stats. It's Waaaaaaaay more than that and it's pretty obvious to me that the exodus from the big sha-llty is at the core of the problem, as it is to any local.

My apologies in advance to all the very nice folks from away that are now my neighbors, but predatory sales techniques by the likes of the scum Percudani and Simon are the proximal cause of much of this trouble.

That and route 80. Maybe twenty dollar tolls would be in order--use the extra money to buy more cops.....

wow! reading through this forum, I was thinking the same thing!! Send a message to the Daily News (NY Manhattan paper) which always runs ad from LTS "WHY PAY RENT, WHEN YOU CAN OWN". The Post is another Manhattan newspaper. I bought my house 6 years ago for the quietness and I use to drive there late at night, I don't any more. Take my pit bull and friends. What a shame! How can we contribute to post an ad in these newspapers, take out an ad "Why Pay Rent, When You Can Own?" "Read the little fine lines, how long of a commute from PA to Manhattan? What is monthly cost?" something along these lines...

It is overcrowding... so now NJ/NY will buy the condo/coop and then what? not pay taxes. Why does it have to be so many units for Chris sake!!! do we need it... Have to agree with you there. A lack of parenting definitely exists because so many parents have to work. However, I was raised in a household in which both parents worked and I turned out fine. The fact that parents travel to work and choose to stay and sleep in the city or wherever does result in problems. I think many of them choose to leave their children here, not because they can't do the commute everyday, but because they just want to push the role of parenting onto others. My husband commutes daily and still makes time for the family each and every day, unfortunately we cannot say this for everyone. But parental absence is a choice people make, it is not a result of commuting.

Our whole world is changing. I did not run from the city because of crime at all. Where I came from we had 2 incidents in the 35 years I was there. I could walk alone at night, people did not walk around with guns like everyone imagines, and there were no gangs. It was a pleasant place and yes it was in the "city". It was very expensive and our family was growing, and we felt the Poconos was a nice affordable place. Everyone is under the impression that people flee from the city because of crime, and that is not always the case. Even the city has changed over the years since I was a child. It is not what it used to be. Change happens everywhere. The world population is growing and so is economy and business everywhere, and it is just not reality to feel the Poconos should be excluded.

I totally agree with you lspirit. Whether it is one or two parents raising a child, it is up to the parents how that child turns out. But a lot of problems stem from bad parenting or lack there of. I was a single mom for quite a few years and I did a fine job with my children. My point is that many criminals have had bad upbringings, it is statistics. Someone mentioned that so many parents commute and are not around. This is unfortunate, but I do not feel that it is the commute that keeps them away for days at a time, it is their lack of parenting skills. Parents need to make time for their children, whether it be one or both parents. Chances are the person who committed this evil crime did not come from a loving stable household. Many children are being raised without proper morals and respect and they are going to be our future. It is scary...

I know if I was moving to another state I would check out all the factors first. Yes taxes are high, it's mainly because of the increase of population moving here each year in Monroe county. The county has to build more schools, fix roads, more police. yes, if don't have a good paying local job, you must commute to your old jobs in Ny and NJ. I truly beleave, and I know this is my opinion, that this person that did this is from out of state and either lives or has family in Tobyhanna or the surrounding area. I know I'm going to get hammered for that statement. I'll stick to my guns and see how this plays out.

There was a Family that lived in PCP about 8 years ago and both parents would commute to NYC everyday. I guess they got tired of driving or sick of taking the bus after a year, and started leaving there two children alone all week and coming home on the weekend. The two girls that were left alone all week were 9 and 6 years old. The 9 year old would take care of the 6 year old like a mother. I dont know how the story came to light, but they were caught after leaving their children for a year. Even if you make it home every night, how much time do you have to spend with your family after woking at least 8 hours and driving 2-5 hours a day?

Those PCP parents did not get sick of commuting, they got sick of parenting and used commuting as an excuse. There are so many children from so many places that are abandoned for many different reasons. I am a stay at home mom so I can be there for my children, and being a good parent is not an easy job. Most families have two working parents. It is not just the commuters who have little time with their families, look at all of those who work local and have to do overtime, or evening hours. Prices will always go up everywhere. Show me a place in which the cost of living has gone down constantly over the years and I am there !!!! Prices go up, people have to work, but somewhere along the line people have become too busy for their children. I would rather my husband spend a few quality hours with the children, rather than get home early and just sit and watch television and ignore his children. It does not matter how far you work, it is what you put into parenting.

This post is for all the law enforcement bashers out there!

They are entitled to breaks just like any other job. I am sure that you get lunch breaks or coffee breaks where you work. Don't pass judgement until you have walked a mile in their shoes. Most people could not do the job that they do. It is a thankless job.

A) Police business doesn't belong in a dinner being discussed with the public in attendance. I don't think Captain Brown would take a liking to that. I've spoken to him, and I know he demands professionalism from his troops. Whatever happened to good old role call?

B) THERE ARE GOOD PSP here. I know a few of them, but as I said before...there aren't enough of them, and the others have "attitudes" and can be very nasty because they are overworked, tired and stretched thin. One or two that I know of were ordered to work on their "people skills".

C) YES, they do bust their a$$$, and NO.. many of us probably couldn't do their jobs, BUT I DO KNOW VERY WELL what they have to deal with as I am related to five cops...two of whom ARE NJ STATE Troopers, three others work in inner cities-so YES I DO HAVE A GREAT KNOWLEDGE of what they deal with.

D) I DO have a problem when a Trooper reports to a burglary of a home for the fourth time in a matter of 6 weeks and tells the homeowner-who is standing there crying..."what do you think we are CSI? I PERSONALLY WITNESSED THIS. Needless to say after four break in's the investigation went NO WHERE because of OTHER crimes they had to deal with and they were UNDERSTAFFED because the "Governor won't give us manpower" is what we were told.

Now this is a horrendous crime and I don't mean to hijack the thread and take the focus off what is really the IMPORTANT here-but, it's not a one way rosy picture with the PSP here-IT'S GOOD AND BAD and that's all my posts said. The same could probably be said for other places as well, but in all honesty, the police presence lacks here, and more police are definately in order for the area based on the population growth. I think someone else said libefore...poor planning on the part of officials,etc.

I sincerely hope they catch whoever did this very quickly.

My bet is on a white male too...with some serious mommy issues. I think it happened outside of PA, and most likely it was a Trucker using the Interstate because he didn't care that the bags were in plain view-he wasn't coming back.

God bless this woman's soul, and God give her family the strength when the time comes to deal with this. IT'S TRULY HORRIBLE.

You'd be surprised where u can find MS13. Anywhere that illegals exist. Can anyone say Newark NJ? MS13 rape and pillage. They raped those four innocent teens, cut the heads of three, tried to cut the head off the fourth but she survived to tell about it- albeit very injured, but a hero none the less.

This isn't the work of MS13- but I do think they exist here. They wouldn't use garbage bags. When they kill it's to make a statement- they wouldn't conceal body parts and they usually just cut off the head. They are extremely dangerous and began as a rebel group in South America. They do have a pronounced violent streak for women. They come from third world South American countries such as Peru and Ecuador, but Mexicans have been known to be among the group as well. They also co exist among other groups such as Bloods and Crypts. We learned all about this when they killed those kids in Newark. They are extremely dangerous and blend very well into the illegal alien population and most times go unnoticed completely until a crime is committed.

lol Jeff I DO live in the Adirondacks and we don't get this kind of stuff up here! my parents and sisters still live in the area and I can never believe half the stuff that is going on in the news! I just thought it was funny that you mentioned moving to the ADK. I mean don't get me wrong, we do have crimes here too . . . just a few weeks ago for instance two 50 year old men were arrested for stealing 3 disposable camera, 2 blocks of yellow cheese, and a deodorant from a Stewart's gas station. (No I'm not kidding!) There seems to be a little less country in the Pocono's with more and more city influence coming in. I live up here and it is located in the middle of nowhere (my nearest city is in a whole 'nother country - Montreal, haha) but I am not scared to walk alone at night and I guess that living in east Jabib is the price I pay for my safety! I hope they catch the freak who did this very soon! My thought is that he is headed into NYC or Newark.

It is bad!!! Look in your paper! Mob ties at casino, body parts on the highway, assault at Pine Ridge, hunters murdered. Not to mention NEPA having one of the highest vehicle accident fatality rates!!! Most of which are young people drinking and driving. Take a look at the standard speaker, the times leader, and the Pocono record. . . . there is way more horrifying news than good news. Then take a look at the Adirondack Daily Enterprise, The Lake Placid News, and the Press Republican. I love NEPA it is where I still call home even though I have been in upstate NY for over 4 years, but I simply can not deny the fact that too many horrible things happen in that area. There is way too much inner city riff raff who move to the area because EVERYTHING (EVERYTHING!!!!) is way cheaper and they are still close to their little ghetto communities. I do not feel safe anymore when I am in the area, which is unfortunate because there are so many positives to living in the Pocono's. It wasn't this bad 5 years ago before I moved, it's like everything changed overnight. So no - Mt Pocono is not Newark, Brooklyn, or Atlantic City (the streets BEHIND the casinos) . . . but it isn't too far off, and for the safety of yourself you need to realize this instead of denying that there is a problem. The Pocono's is where everyone runs to when they get in trouble in any of the near by cities, because as someone else already mentioned, these crims think that the police are like Mayberry in the Pocono's. They must have missed that part about how Pennsylvania has one of the hardest State Police training programs in the nation. What happened a few months ago? Those two dudes who shot 2 young cops in the city fled to 380 for freedom and got caught because the fat guy was too slow and the skinny dude was afraid to sleep in the woods at night? When I was a kid I used to be afraid of the bears and deer (what? deer can kick - haha) that were in the woods and my dad always used to say that I should be more afraid of people and less afraid of bears. Well I guess he was right. Maybe we can start over breeding the black bear (or deer depending on your level of skittishness!) to scare away the city people! I'm not ragging on you, only trying to let you know that there is indeed a problem in the Pocono's and that some thing's gotta give. Have you lived here your whole life or are you a newbie? Don't even get me started on Wilkes Barre and Hazleton! (Went to HS in WB and college in H-ton and they weren't nearly as bad 7 years ago!) My thoughts are also with the family of the victim at this time. Unfortunately I do think it will take quite some time to figure this one out, but I know that the #### who did this will be brought to justice somehow or another.

No National News. Im in upstate NY and only know because my family lives in the area. Trust me, the Poconos will soon be a dead vacation spot. Then I go into defense mode, because crappy or not - it is my home!

I agree with goo, its the quality time you spend with your kids that count. Sitting down on a Sunday and wasting a whole day watching sports is crazy that's 52 days that could be spending teaching your kids a sport or taking a small trip to historical site or museum. I used to get caught up in the TV and then I looked at my boys waiting for dad to do something with them, its not a chore its about loving and spending time with your kids before they grow up and do the same thing to their kids as you did to them. I was blessed as a kid and didn't know it, my father coached our little team but every spare moment he had we went fishing together after he came home from work. God rest his soul for being a dad to me.

They are the most visible gang out there. Many of them tattoo there faces with "MS" and devil horns. All members have to let everyone know they are in MS13.

I just watched an episode of Gangland about MS13 on History Channel:)

There is an episode about the Hells Angels On-Demand too. Scary, but interesting.

I raised the gang flag. There was a similar horror that happened in SC that resembled this back some time ago. A man led authorities, yesterday, to the remains of his mother. He cut her up, but buried the remains in different areas. I employ 2 HA members at outdoor shows. Awesome security detail and right nice fellows. Bad enough that drugs are killing many, now they're killing for drugs and over territories. Lock and load.

I just read some postings, not all. If you read through the police blotter on their website, you can see what type of people are committing what type of crimes in this area. DUIs seem mostly college kids. They come from all over, but their age indicated they probably attend ESU. One homeless guy accounts for like a third of them!!!! I think the minor crimes like disorderly and DUI, when you take the college kids out, goes to the locals or people who reside here at least, they could be from anywhere. The larger crimes are people who don't even live here, or they are recent move-ins from the city. I praise the local police for everything they have done. Look at the blotter to see what these guys deal with! And sometime, have a great sense of humor about it! I think we waste time when we try to put blame on the people moving in. It isn't how much crime people from the cities commit, it is the violence of it. We did not have the constant violent crimes like we do now before the influx. But, in several years, our youngins will catch on and mimic. So, I think we should jump our thinking to that point. What do we do now? It seems the police know what they are doing. I feel confident with them. It is we who are the idiots. I hate knowing that our quiet community has come to this, but you must lock your car (to avoid someone being in there when you get back to it - that was a LABAR at walmart), your house and not open it to anyone you don't know - I go upstairs to view who is down there and yell down to them - watch when walking to the ATM and don't go at night - use one in a grocery store (but not Mr Zs!!!), and just not have your head up your bum anymore. We need surveillance cameras on Main st stbg (unless they already put some up?) and Walmart needs to provide better parking lot security. Local bars need to enforce not serving to SLIGHTLY intoxicated patrons, but that won't happen until they are sued a few times.

First off, I never said the police weren't doing their job. I was just wondering how 5 cops could be taking a break at the same time. Sorry for asking! And I was talking about the local police, not the state troopers. I have had MANY acquaintances in the past who were law enforcement officers and I know that MANY of them were crooked, which is why I said acquaintances, not friends. Busting someone for pot and taking the pot for his own use, etc. I'm not saying all, but MANY. I was just making an observation. That's all.

Molly, this crime could not have been committed by a trucker. Remains were found on both sides of the highway, meaning that whoever did this traveled in both directions. A trucker would travel in one direction only. And truckers drive solo. This likely required more than one person, one to drive and one to toss the bags from the window.

I sure hope they can quickly identify this woman. It's a little disconcerting to not know if this was a random crime against an innocent stranger, or an isolated incident involving something more. This is sure no longer the Poconos I grew up in. :(

Oh, yes, Mr. Green Jeans.....wow, can't believe I forgot to mention him! It was such a shame, he was a good man.

I only raised the question as to how many generations everyone goes back because I wanted people to stop and think, what makes someone a local? Since my roots go back to the times of settlements and Indians, does that make me more local than anyone else? And does that make those who had family move in years after my ancestors defended the forts against Indians a transplant? I will be the first to admit that I can be as hard as a lot of others on this forum about the whole local vs. transplant thing, but the reason I am is because of the crime and the crime alone. Yes there was crime, there always has been crime.....I believe it started way back when Eve tempted Adam to eat from the tree. But how ever, the frequency and severity of the crimes that now have become a everyday part of the lives of the residents of the area is out of control, it stands to reason that the population explosion has a large role to play in what is happening to the area. That along with TV, Movies, Music.....moral values have declined drastically over the last 30 years. Now matter where you are from, Cresco, Long Island, Brooklyn, Newark, Miami, Dallas, Detroit or Compton.....having 8 bags of body parts turn up in your neighborhood or on the interstate that runs through the heart of the community is not a everyday occurrence. Wether this person is local, from NY, NJ, OH, MD, VA.....It is one sick individual, people like this can be rural or lurking in the midst of a crowded city street. I hope they catch this person.

Oh yeah I almost forgot.....It was not a trucker, no trucker is going to chop up a body in his truck or carry bags of body parts either, there are DOT checkpoints they have to go through, there is always a chance of a driver getting a DOT inspection, they check for medicine in the driver area of the cab, they look in the cab of the truck.....nope no one would risk that.

It's the wide open space, and not enough States on the roads as in other states. You can tell the difference when you drive through the states. Coming from Jersey there's a ### loads of Troopers out trying to catch speeders...they converge. On any road you'll find more than the average two that you find here. Same in NY, Same in Del, and it starts to get even worse when you drive south.

Your right I forgot El Salvador...I was getting there lol.
THEY DO CO EXIST with other groups I didn't say they liked each other. Check the Newark, NJ area, Brooklyn, and other area's. In fact, in Newark the housing projects that these four were living out of or had lived out of was full of Bloods, Crypts and MS 13.

AS FOR THEM BEING THE MOST NOTICEABLE GROUP-I BEG TO DIFFER. THEY ARE NOT, ESPECIALLY IN THESE PARTS. Take drive through S'Burg one night and see if you find anyone with that description or you find all the rest with their BLING and Red on.

Your probably right, I didn't realize that. I feel like you do...I want them caught. IT'S SCARY. I know it's not the same Pocono's because I traveled up here every year as a kid to vacation or at least to take a day trip. It is different and that does sadden me.

I have been begging my husband to move for a few years now, but we are routed due to his job. This is not the Poconos I moved to. And I am a transplant. (not to america. im a 1/4 cherokee) 25 yrs ago when my family moved here we were given #### about having been from NJ - bet all you locals who complained then would be kissing our bums now!!! Haha. I think we need to deal with the fact that we may never know who she is. Look at the missing persons websites. There are bodies that were recovered, that were never identified - even with a face!!! Some people have no one and are never missed. The criminal element comes here for two reasons. A. Their parents bring them. B. They aren't tough enough to make it in the city, so they come here to be the alpha dogs. A few of them get a bullet in the #### as they are committing a crime, they may not think that anymore.

I like your thinking, and that's how I can tell your from Jersey! lol

Seriously though, I can half agree with the locals here too. When I moved here from the Shore area of NJ-I did so because I wanted to live in the country. I didn't come here and expect that the local people here would adapt to MY ways...I expected that there would be things I needed to adapt to. I came here to live in peace and harmony and for the most part have done so. I have made friends with many of the locals-case in point my neighbors behind me. They are Palmerton and Allentown raised, lived up here for years....I love them like family and that's reciprocal. We have tons of fun together, and yes, they will tell you I'm a crazy Jersey girl, but the loyalty, comradery, and the caring is all there. They teach me things about these parts (being Dutch and Irish/German)and I willingly have become the student.

I agree that many people come here with an attitude....when there is no need for it. Back in Jersey we sometimes needed to have this attitude to survive in certain parts, and the same can be said for NY, but what transplants need to learn when they get here is that the locals are peace abiding...non confrontation people, and they look at us like we have six heads when we fly off the handle. Bottom line is HERE it is offensive to have an attitude, and most unnecessary. As for the other stuff that comes with no morals, family values, no goals in life other than to maim and harm others...I COMPLETELY AGREE....after all that's what we came here to get away from! I personally DO NOT leave my kids to commute, DO NOT teach my kids to hurt others, DO NOT wish to become a burden to the people of these beautiful rolling hills in any way. I came here because I wanted this to become my home. Don't get me wrong...the attitude pops up when needed, but more times than not, it is not needed. Because of my health problems (need the sun and warmth for these bones) I will leave the area at some point, but I hope to leave it better than I found it :), and unfortunately with things like this happening, that doesn't look likely.

You're right about them getting the bullet. Human nature being what it is EYE FOR AN EYE. I know the authorities don't like to see people think like that but I have seen that work. I grew up in a little part of a city in Jersey known as Little Italy. Back then, cops were never called, the neighborhood dealt with things their own way. I remember once when the Baptist church down the street had a problem with people stealing the hub caps off the Rev.'s (black minister) car...they (the black community) came to our area mechanic. He soldered razor blades in their spokes rims. Problem solved. It didn't happen anymore. While I realize that's extreme, it was the way things were. Still to today, the neighborhood has not changed. Everybody is still very tolerant of each other, and everyone knows everyone and each other's kids. People looked out for each other and for the most part still do.

I have a little more hope that we will know who she is with Science being as good as it is. Hey, if they can make a bust to catch John List (Westfield, NJ-murdered his entire family) after 18 years, they will find out she is, and we will find out who did this. The truth will always come out!

Windgap...not a truer word said. LEAVE DE NAPLES ALONE.....focus on bigger things like this. Who prosecutes a Priest? Someone not afraid of going to H$!!! Wouldn't be me.

Your right about the organization, they'd find Bin Laden lol

It's a sad day....no one should have to die the way she did, and we shouldn't all be here debating how her murderer should be dealt with. EYE FOR AN EYE. Check the bible...that's the way things are done or should be IN TIMES LIKE THIS. Do unto other's....

Do you think the Feds have been called in to help by now? I do. Many more resources especially their labs in Quantico.

I hadn't left my home in days because I haven't been feeling well. Early this evening I left to go to my sister's in Wayne NJ to babysit my niece and nephew. As I was driving I80 EAST I spotted a garbage bag with something red laying on top of it. It was no more than 1/4 before the tolls. At first I told myself it's probably just garbage, but then as I drove more, it just didn't sit well with me. I tried to call the PSP from my cell phone 570-838-7701, but I got a busy signal for ten minutes. I decided to call Lehighton because I couldn't get through to Swiftwater. WOULD YOU BELIEVE THAT LEHIGHTON ACTUALLY WOULD NOT TAKE THE REPORT, and made me continue to try to contact Swiftwater??????? Absolutely ridiculous. I thought about forgetting about it...letting it go thinking, maybe it's just garbage..who knows, but it JUST didn't sit right with me. So I tried Swiftwater again and finally got through. The female trooper was wonderful, she took the entire report, my name, my cell number even the number where I was going to be staying in NJ. She called me back 20 mins later to get a better handle on where I saw the bag, and I explained that I saw it about 2 mins before the tolls...it was sitting right along side the road. We determined that it was after exit 310 and before the toll plaza. It was a lawn/leaf bag-black or green but a dark color. I haven't heard back from them. IF IT BODY PARTS (WHICH I SINCERELY HOPE IT IS NOT) then I hope it's the remainder of what they were looking for, and not something new. If it's a bag of garbage, then I feel better. I have to admit I got creeped out by it. Im still in NJ, will return

Body parts found on road EIGHT BAGS, INCLUDING ONE WITH A WOMAN'S HEAD, found along Interstates 380, 80.

SWIFTWATER, Pa. | A woman's head was found Tuesday in a trash bag along Interstate 380. It was one of eight bags found with body parts.

It was unclear if all of the body was found, investigators said.

"At this point, no, we are not comfortable we have found all the pieces. We have certainly done a search of Interstate 80 in Monroe, Carbon, Luzerne and Columbia counties. Again, could something be dumped down the side, certainly," state police Lt. Robert Barta said.

The first bag was found Tuesday morning near the Mount Pocono exit of Interstate 380 by a state road worker salting the highway. More remains were found later Tuesday along Interstate 80.

Monroe County District Attorney Dave Christine told reporters that a head was recovered, according to The Pocono Record.

The newspaper also reported a knife was found at an Interstate 380 interchange, but it is not known if that weapon is connected with the human remains.

The woman's identity was not immediately determined. An autopsy was scheduled for today.

Interstate 380 was closed from 10 a.m. to noon Tuesday between Interstate 80 and Exit 8.

Investigators Search for Answers in Woman's Death

The woman's remains were found scattered along Interstate 380 and 80 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

Wednesday, January 30, 11:44 a.m.

By Ryan Leckey

An autopsy is being done on the remains of a woman which were found dismembered and scattered along the interstate in the Poconos. The remains were found Tuesday morning in parts of Monroe and Lackawanna County.

Police consider their search for answers a homicide investigation.

Dumped body parts still unidentified
Authorities say victim was white with dark hair and heavy-set.

January 31, 2008

A woman whose dismembered body was found in garbage bags along two highways in the Poconos suffered "multiple violent injuries, any of which caused her death," authorities said Wednesday after an autopsy.

They said it's a homicide case but wouldn't be more specific about how the woman died.

Though her identity is still a mystery, more has come to light about her physical characteristics since her remains were found Tuesday. Police said she was white with dark hair with some gray mixed in. She was also described as heavy-set, 5 feet 7 inches tall.

State police said Wednesday they were getting tips and missing persons reports at a rate of three to four an hour and from as far away as Nevada. Parts of the woman's body were found along Interstates 80 and 380.

"We've been receiving a ton of leads from both in-state and out-of-state," said police Sgt. Gregg Mrochko, supervisor of the criminal investigation unit at the Swiftwater barracks in Pocono Township.

Troopers were among those attending the autopsy Wednesday at Lehigh Valley Hospital-Cedar Crest. Police will couple the findings with other information to follow up on leads. People are still being encouraged to call with information, no matter how insignificant it might seem, Mrochko said.

The woman's remains were found at eight locations along a 15-mile stretch of interstate, primarily in Monroe County. A piece of her torso was found in a ditch off I-380 in Covington Township, Lackawanna County.

The first bag was discovered by a state highway crew along I-380. Authorities said Tuesday that a severed head was among the remains, but did not disclose additional information about other body parts recovered.

Mrochko said police will conduct a more comprehensive search of the areas where body parts turned up. It will probably involve state police aircraft and possible K-9 dogs, he said. There was no organized search Wednesday.

State police investigators hope to develop a sketch of the victim to show the public, but that depends on the autopsy and what they come up with, Mrochko said.

Monroe County Coroner David Thomas wouldn't elaborate on the "multiple violent injuries" statement about the autopsy findings. Trooper Robert Sebastinelli said authorities aren't saying more because they want "to protect the integrity of the investigation."

Figuring out the cause of death will prove challenging, according to one local forensic pathologist. Isidore Mihalakis, a forensic pathologist for more than 30 years in the Lehigh Valley, New Jersey, said it's difficult to determine how someone died when the remains are dismembered.

Dismembered woman took risks for drugs
Scranton ex-boyfriend says he tried to pull her from perilous lifestyle

In the weeks before she was slain and dismembered, Deanna Marie Null broke her boyfriend, Russell Cummings, over her drug use.

"I tried to get her out of it," Cummings said Tuesday, standing outside the S of Assisi soup kitchen. "But I couldn't."

He had known her about a year, he said, and although she didn't usually take front of him, Cummings said he had seen her smoke crack cocaine occasionally.

Sometimes, he said, she'd arrange to buy drugs for people, pocket the money and deliver the drugs.

"A couple times she robbed a couple guys. That I know. ... She knew it was dangerous," Cummings said.

Police have described Null, 36, as a transient, but she did make some friends.

"She was a sweetheart. She wasn't mean," recalled Sharon Nemeth, 48, who works from a neighborhood bar called The Melba.

Null's head and some body parts were found Jan. 29 in eight locations along 380 and 80 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties. At the time, no one knew where she was. The mystery ended Monday when state police released her name.

Also Monday, police said they were looking for a car that might have figured in the death. They described it as a blue or black Cadillac or Buick, from the late 1970s or early '80s, with a four- or five-strip chrome luggage rack on the trunk lid. It had a license plate from an unknown state.

The car was last seen about two weeks ago at Olive and Capouse streets in Scranton, troopers said. The driver was described as black, 5 feet 9 inches to 6 feet tall, short, military-style haircut and a stocky build.

Anyone with information about the case is asked to contact state police at Scranton 570-839-7701 or 1-866-403-2946.

Null had a criminal record. In 2003, a state grand jury found she sold cocaine to an undercover agent in 2001 and 2002 in Williamsport, where she had lived. The next year, she pleaded guilty to delivery of a controlled substance and conspiracy, according to Lycoming County Court records.

In 2004, she was sentenced to jail, and early the next year placed on work release. She had to pay a $1,340 fine, and paid the county intermittently from July 2005 to April 2007, court records show. But with no payments five months after that, on Sept. 21, 2007, issued a warrant for her arrest.

Man charged with killing dismembered woman in Pa.

STROUDSBURG, Pa. (AP) — State police say a man has been charged with killing a woman whose dismembered remains were found dumped along highways in Pocono more than a month ago.

Police say 33-year-old Charles Ray Hicks was arrested in the death of 36-year-old Deanna Null. He has told reporters at his arraignment Saturday that authorities are wrong.

Police have not explained the relation between Null and Hicks.

Her remains were found Jan. 29 in trash bags strewn along Interstates 80 and 90.

Hicks was charged with homicide, aggravated assault, tampering with evidence and abuse of corpse. He is being held without bail in Monroe County Correctional Institution.

Deanna marie null dismemberment case

A chilling profile

Crime fits pattern, expert says

<http://www.timesleader.com/news/17333919.html>

In the back of a prisoner transport on the way to the Monroe County jail, acc homicide suspect Charles Ray Hicks told state police troopers he knew why the hands of Deanna Marie Null were inside his bathroom.

But, he never said anything more.

That left investigators without an explanation of the murder and dismemberment of a 36-year-old woman, and why – if Hicks is guilty – he would discard all body parts except her hands.

Criminal personality expert Judith M. Sgarzi doesn't know but has a theory.

"He kept the hands, about all my guess would be, to use to please himself or his fantasy of what he had her do before he actually murdered her," said Sgarzi, professor of criminal justice at Mount Ida College in Newton Centre, Mass.

Sgarzi, an expert on criminal personality development and domestic violence, says the dismembering killer fits the psychological profile of a serial killer – a sexual predator who has no remorse and commits crimes for pleasure.

She also suspects the body of a previous victim is somewhere out there.

While there have been no updates in the Null case since Hicks was arrested, Sgarzi believes a nationwide search for similarities into other unsolved dismemberment cases may be under way. To search for patterns, Sgarzi said investigators will have to look for similar unsolved crimes prior to the Null case.

If police investigating the case know more, they're not saying.

That leaves the public still wondering about the circumstances surrounding the slaying of the former Williamsport woman.

What they do know is that the woman's body parts were found in January – scattered across highways in the Pocono region.

Null's hands were found inside Hicks' Coolbaugh Township home in early March after his arrest for the homicide.

The hands were wrapped in the Feb. 4 issue of the Scranton Times-Tribune.

Null's body parts were found Jan. 29 along interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe County and 14 miles northbound along I-380 into Lackawanna County.

The man that police say murdered Deanna Marie Null and scattered her dismembered body along area interstates had a history of arrests for domestic violence, according to court records obtained by Times-Shamrock Newspapers.

Charles Ray Hicks Jr. was arrested and charged with assault and battery of his wife, Sheinina Mona Hicks in Hampton, Va., twice in the summer of 2006.

The first charge was dismissed in exchange for a guilty plea to the second, said C. Bane, the assistant commonwealth attorney who handled the case.

Although Hicks pleaded guilty, the charge was suspended until March 10, 2008, as Hicks stayed out of trouble, Bane said. The deal came about partially because Sheinina Hicks was in Chicago when the trial date arrived, making it difficult to prosecute, and because he was a first-time offender, Bane said.

The case may never have proceeded to trial, but Virginia has a "no-drop policy" meaning that when an assault is reported, the state is required to pursue the case, Bane said.

Hicks went to trial on a charge of possession of a controlled substance in April 2007, Bane said, but he could not recall the details.

Hicks was found not guilty, Bane said.

Hicks was also charged with the assault of Blanca Huertas in Burleson, Texas. The charges were dropped.

Efforts to reach Sheinina Hicks and Huertas were unsuccessful.

Texas link to local murder investigated

DA reveals new angle in dismemberment case

STROUDSBURG — Police plan to visit Texas to see if there is any connection death there and a Monroe County murder case awaiting trial, the District Attorney's Office said during a Thursday court proceeding.

Charles Hicks, 34, is awaiting trial on charges of killing Deanna Marie Null, 36, dismembering Null's body, putting the body parts in trash bags and scattering them along interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe County. The District Attorney's Office seeks the death penalty against Hicks on the grounds that Hicks tortured Null, her death.

Defense attorney Bill Sayer had requested the court have the prosecution disprove the evidence it has of Null's torture, since this alleged torture is the basis for seeking the death penalty.

It was during a Thursday court proceeding on Sayer's request that District Attorney David Christine said troopers plan to visit Texas to see if a death there has any connection to the Hicks case. Police have been checking for any connections between the Hicks case and cases in jurisdictions outside of Monroe County, Christine declining afterward to comment further.

Hicks lived in Texas before coming to Pennsylvania to work at Tobyhanna Army Depot in January.

As for Sayer's request, Monroe County President Judge Ronald Vican gave Sayer 30 days to review the prosecution's information to see what evidence points to the Null case and file any appropriate motions in response to that information. A court proceeding on the matter likely will be scheduled at a future date.

Null, a mother who lived at various addresses including Williamsport, was last seen alive in Scranton in mid-January, getting into a car that matches the description of Hicks' vehicle, according to a police affidavit. The scattered trash bags containing body parts were found in late January.

Hicks told police he met Null in Scranton, when he went there looking for "girlfriends," according to the affidavit. He said he smoked crack cocaine with her and gave her money in exchange for sex on more than one occasion, but didn't kill her.

He said he was scared to come forward after learning she had been murdered. He figured she had been killed over drugs and that he himself might be in danger. He also told police he had been prescribed psychiatric medication in the past, according to the affidavit.

Police testified at a March preliminary hearing that they had searched Hicks' home in early March and found evidence including Null's severed hands, plastic trash bags, and a saw.

DA's office: Hicks should be executed if convicted of Poconos murder
Toby man accused of killing Deanna Null, then spreading her remains along i

January 14, 2009

A Tobyhanna man accused of murdering and dismembering a Williamsport w scattering her remains along interstates 80 and 380 should be executed if co the District Attorney's Office said Tuesday.

Monroe County Court will decide if the death penalty will be the alternative to prison for Charles Hicks, 34, if Hicks is convicted of killing Deanna Null, 36. I rules in favor of the death penalty and a jury convicts Hicks, the jury would t whether Hicks deserves life in prison or an execution.

Null, a mother of two, was last seen in January 2008 in Scranton, getting into matching the description of Hicks' vehicle, according to police. Null's body pa were found in trash bags dumped alongside the interstates in Monroe County

Police said they found similar trash bags, Null's severed hands wrapped in old newspaper pages and a saw in Hicks' home, as well as a blood-stained work car's trunk.

The district attorney contends that Null was tortured before death, and cites reason to seek the death penalty. Defense attorney William Sayer in Septem the court to have the prosecution disclose evidence of Null's torture.

An omnibus hearing on the evidence was held Tuesday before President Judge Vican.

At Sayer's request, county Coroner Dave Thomas and Deputy Coroner Cindy were present. Sayer had planned for a forensic pathologist also to be present not.

During the hearing, District Attorney David Christine and First Assistant Distr Attorney Michael Mancuso submitted a report from New Jersey pathologist Is Mihalakis supporting the torture claim.

Sayer said the court should dismiss the report as hearsay since the prosecuti have Mihalakis present in court to offer live testimony. Christine said a trial, omnibus hearing, is the proper venue for live witness testimony to be heard credible or not.

"I'm not asking the court to rule on credibility," Sayer said. "I'm merely askir commonwealth to give as detailed an explanation as possible on what eviden testimony they have so that Your Honor can make an informed decision on w they have established prima facie (sufficient evidence)."

Vican said, "Those issues are not for us to decide at an omnibus hearing."

Prima facie is determined during a preliminary hearing at the district court le to a case going to county court.

With that said, Vican granted the prosecution's request to quash Sayer's sub motion to have the coroner's witnesses testify at an omnibus hearing. Vican

SWIFTWATER, Pa. — Parts of a woman's body were found in eight trash bags scattered over a wide area in northeastern Pennsylvania, authorities said Tuesday.

The first bag was found Tuesday morning near the Mount Pocono exit of Interstate 380 by a state road worker salting the highway. More remains were found later Tuesday along Interstate 80. Authorities said at an afternoon news conference that they were not sure if all of the body was recovered.

A head was recovered along I-380, Monroe County District Attorney Dave Christine said.

ORMOND BEACH - Police opened a homicide investigation Thursday morning after they discovered several bags of human body parts in a canal near Tomoka State Park.

Officials could not say whether the black plastic bags contained the remains of several people or just one. They could not give any other details either, except to say that the remains, which included a foot and part of a leg, seemed to be "Caucasian."

A fisherman spotted the first bag -- a standard garbage bag -- shortly after 9 a.m. in a canal that runs parallel to a remote part of Beach Street, near the Tomoka River bridge.

Who's missing in PA anyway? We have a dilemma here as NY DL NJ VA MD WV are all near this area.....who's missing in those states?

People are not garbage. When did we become a throw away society; have we always been? Even the ice man was murdered, so I guess that answers that question. Like the kid in T2 said to Arnold: "we're not going to make it are we".....

Police ID woman whose dismembered body found along interstates

The Associated Press

SWIFTWATER, Pa. - Police have identified a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were found in trash bags along two interstates in the Pocono Mountains.

Deanna Marie Null, 36, was killed and her remains dismembered, placed in trash bags and scattered along Interstates 380 and 80, state police said Monday. The first bag was found last Tuesday by a road worker salting I-380.

Null was last seen getting into an older-model sedan in Scranton two weeks ago, but police said they have no suspects and no arrest has been made.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing after authorities circulated a description of the victim. She was identified using dental records.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks. It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

Null lived in the Scranton and Williamsport areas but was "relatively transient," he said. The last time she was seen alive was in mid-January.

"There's a two-week gap we're trying to close," Bartal said.

A man who answered the phone at a listing for Null in Williamsport identified himself as Null's brother-in-law, but said the family did not want to comment.

The car that Null was seen getting into was described as an older-model (late 1970s or early 1980s), dark Buick or Cadillac sedan with a cloth or leather roof, chrome luggage rack and white license plate. Police described the driver as a black man, 5-feet-9 to 6 feet, with a short military-style haircut and a stocky build.

Court records indicate that Null pleaded guilty in Lycoming County to drug and conspiracy charges in 2003. Null violated her parole in 2005 and a warrant was issued for her arrest last September for failure to pay court costs and fines, records show.

Did Deanna Null's Hard Life Catch Up With Her?

According to police and friends, Deanna Marie Null had a long history of drug abuse. She was known to go missing for long periods of time, often as a result of a drug binge.

In the days before she went missing friends reported seeing Null with a man none of her friends recognized. And days after her body parts were discovered along two Pennsylvania highways police have confirmed that Null was going to testify in a robbery trial.

But as police investigate her murder friends and family are still stunned that Deanna Null was gruesomely killed and her severed head and body parts were scattered along a 15-mile stretch of Interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

Police are trying to identify the last person who may have seen Null alive. Witnesses say Null was last seen with an unidentified man in a dark-colored, late 70's or 80's sedan. The car may have had a soft top. Null was also scheduled to appear at the trial of Robert Kendricks on January 24. Kendricks claimed he was with Null on October 31, 2006, when a robbery occurred at Variety Brews in Scranton.

When Kendricks took the stand at his trial last week and said did not commit the robbery because he was with Deanna Null at the time. But Null could not refute his claim because she was already missing.

However, a jury convicted Kendricks other other robberies. Kendricks has been in prison since he was arrested on November 3, 2006.

We're learning more tonight about the life of the woman whose body parts were discovered last week in the Poconos. Police are painting a picture of a person who sometimes found trouble. But at least on one occasion, trouble came looking for her. WFMZ's Mike Lowe has the latest. >>She was spotted on the streets. >>This intersection in Scranton was the last place Deanna Null was seen alive. Last week, parts of her dismembered body, including her severed head, were discovered in black trash bags scattered along Interstates 380 and 80 in the Poconos. >>Elliott: It's very sick individual that can do something like this. Discard body parts throughout the highway. >> The monster and his motive remain a mystery. But investigators are exploring a possible link between her killing and a drive-by shooting in Williamsport almost six years ago. >>Hi Tianna. >>It was back in 2002 that a group of men fired shots at the home where Deanna was living with her boyfriend and their two young children. Her boyfriend Robert Kendricks is black. The shooting was called a hate crime. This is how Deanna reacted at the time. >>Deanna Null: It was disturbing. How could people be so ignorant, you know, to other people? >>Aside from that incident, Deanna had a troubled past. She reportedly spent time in prison for selling cocaine in Williamsport. >> Elliott: She did have a drug history. >> According to police here last known address was here, in the 1200 block of Capouse Avenue in Scranton. It was not a permanent home, though. Police say she bounced around quite a bit between Scranton and Williamsport. >> Chief David Elliot: The investigation's leading back to where she frequented our area, set up residences here temporarily. She's pretty much homeless in the area, but she was staying at a few residences in the city's hill section. >> In another twist, Deanna was scheduled to testify in court as an alibi witness in a robbery case just a few days before her body was found. Police say it's not likely that case is related to her death.

SWIFTWATER — Deanna Marie Null spent Jan. 18 riding around Scranton in a soft-top sedan with a man none of her friends recognized.

Six days later, police went to her last known address in the city. She was slated to testify as an alibi witness in a robbery trial last week, but officials had been unable to locate her for months. This trip was no different.

Five days later, Ms. Null was found gruesomely murdered, her severed head and dismembered body bagged and strewn along Interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

The investigation aimed at filling in the blanks between the time she was last seen with the man and when her remains were found reached into the city this week. Police interviewed acquaintances of the murdered 36-year-old who spent the past few years living between Scranton and Williamsport.

"She was seen throughout the day with this man," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said of the man described as a black male, 5 feet 9 inches tall, with a short military-style haircut and stocky build. "We don't know who he is. I can say we've hit a lot of dead ends."

Ms. Null and the unidentified man were spotted driving in a dark-colored, late 1970s or 1980s Cadillac or Buick model sedan, with a soft top. Witnesses who saw the two together could only identify the license plate as white — not much help, as Pennsylvania and neighboring states New York and Maryland all have white license plates, Lt. Bartal said.

Another complication is that some witnesses have offered conflicting information, Lt. Bartal said. For example, some gave different dates when asked when they saw Ms. Null with the man.

In many cases, witnesses have refused to talk to authorities, Lt. Bartal said. "We're running into a lot of that, for whatever reason," he said, speculating that some may have criminal records, while others are scared silent because of the brutality of the murder. "We tell people we just want to know about her, that's all."

Described as a transient with a history of convictions on drug-related charges, Ms. Null was known to go missing from time to time, investigators say.

Robert Kendricks, 47, claimed he was with Ms. Null on Oct. 31, 2006, at the time when Variety Brews, 514 Ash St., was robbed, Deputy District Attorney Margie Bisignani said Tuesday. Mr. Kendricks was suspected in the robbery and planned to use Ms. Null, with whom he had been romantically involved, as an alibi witness, Ms. Bisignani said.

Investigators for prosecutors and the defense could not locate Ms. Null at the Vine Street address Mr. Kendricks listed for her, and she did not appear to testify at his trial last week, Ms. Bisignani said.

Scranton police went looking for Ms. Null as late as Jan. 24, but were unable to find her, Ms. Bisignani said.

Mr. Kendricks took the stand at his trial last week and said he could not have committed the robbery because he was with Ms. Null.

A jury convicted him of robbery and related charges. He has also been charged in two other robberies — in the 1100 block of Vine Street on Oct. 30, 2006, and at Stafford Avenue and River Street on Nov. 1, 2006. He also listed Ms. Null as an alibi in those cases, which are still pending.

He has been in prison since his arrest Nov. 3, 2006, Ms. Bisignani said.

Attorney George Gretz, who represents Mr. Kendricks, said he did not know whether Mr. Kendricks has been questioned in Ms. Null's death.

"There is no motive for him to want her dead," he said. "She would have supported his alibi."

They need to catch this guy before he kills someone else. Remember the guy that killed all the prostitutes in Washington state? It took years to find that guy. Arsonist burned down apartment building shortly after woman's dismembered body discovered.

SCRANTON – The murdered 36-year-old woman in the photo had a face that Nasser Mohammadzad immediately recognized.

Just a month before her dismembered body was found along interstate highways on Jan. 29, Deanna Marie Null was living in one of Mohammadzad's apartments at 1844 N. Main Ave. in Scranton, above the former Buckingham Oriental Rugs.

The 5-foot, 7-inch, light-skinned woman moved into Providence Square Apartments in November and was living with a Stroudsburg man whom Mohammadzad identified to authorities as James Mack. Null and Mack claimed to be married.

The landlord last saw her on Dec. 6, when Null paid her $400 monthly rent on the one-bedroom apartment. Null likely moved out on or before Jan. 6.

In mid-February, less than two weeks after Null's remains were found, the North Main Avenue apartment building where she had lived burned to the ground – a fire that investigators ruled arson. Someone apparently had set a propane tank in the hallway in an attempt to blow up the building on Feb. 16 while 18 residents were inside.

The fire was set within days after state police interviewed one of the tenants regarding the Null case.

This was not the first place Null frequented in Scranton that has burned since her body was discovered. A fire at the former Jukebox Pub and Eatery on Capouse Avenue was ruled arson after flames engulfed the one-story building on March 2.

It is not known if the two fires are linked to Null's murder investigation.

Several attempts were made to reach Scranton Fire Marshal Marty Monahan, but he did not return calls.

State police at Hazleton, who are investigating the Null homicide, would not say if the death and the arsons are linked.

Null was last seen less than two weeks before the gruesome discovery. Friends told police they saw her climbing into the front seat of a late 1970s or early 1980s dark model sedan on the corner of Olive Street and Capouse Avenue in Scranton. They said she often frequented that area near the train tracks. A four- or five-strip chrome luggage rack was on the vehicle's trunk lid.

Behind the wheel of the Cadillac or Buick was a man described as black, 5 feet, 9 inches to 6 feet tall, with a military-style haircut and a stocky build.

Mohammadzad said he does not recall seeing a vehicle or person matching the description.

On Jan. 28, the woman's body parts were found along interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

A positive identification was made on Feb. 4 through Null's dental records after family members contacted police.

Authorities have been tight-lipped about the investigation.

"We've hit a lot of dead ends," said Lt. Robert Bartal of the state police at Hazleton. "We do continue to get leads and follow them up."

Null's family in Williamsport has learned few details about the case, according to Craig Kimble, Null's brother-in-law. He said the family is not ready to talk about their daughter's death.

When Mohammadzad last saw Null on Dec. 6, she was accompanied by a different man. Null claimed he was Mack's brother, the landlord said.

Null paid the rent in cash. Her messy brown hair had not been brushed. She told the landlord that Mack was in jail and she had money to pay for rent, Mohammadzad recalled.

"She looked like she was on drugs," Mohammadzad said.

When the owner checked the apartment on Jan. 6, the only items he found were a mattress and radio in the bedroom.

Police asked him about Mack, who had told the landlord when he moved in on Nov. 6 that he relied on a friend to give him a ride to and from his factory job in Stroudsburg.

"He (Mack) told me he was working there but wanted to get an apartment over here," said Mohammadzad, who owns several other businesses in the 1800 block of Providence Square.

And, the man with Null who claimed his work was in Stroudsburg never had a vehicle even though his job was an hour drive away. Mohammadzad went through tenant records he had on file at 1844 N. Main Ave., which verified Mack never registered a vehicle.

A month later, Mack would tell his landlord he had a change of plans. He wanted to move back to Stroudsburg because he wanted to be "close by the highways."

Those words now give Mohammadzad chills.

Bartal refused to comment about Mack.

Null, who is from Williamsport, had no permanent address in Scranton during her two years there. She often was homeless and lived on the streets or in various apartments with strangers.

But, relatives have fond memories of the former Deanna Marie Bryan who graduated from Williamsport High School in 1990.

"She is really a nice girl," said Kimble, who is married to Null's sister Angela Bryan. "She liked to go out. She had a lot of friends that cared about her."

Anyone with information is asked to contact state police at Swiftwater at 570-839-7701.

Charles Hicks, 33, of Tobyhanna, has been charged with murder and dismemberment in the Deanna Marie Null body parts case. Null's dismembered remains were found along interstates in Monroe and Lackawanna Counties in January.

Hicks was arrested Saturday morning and arraigned by District Judge Thomas Shiffer in Stroud Township around 1:30 p.m.. He denied involvement in the murder. "These guys are telling me I did something I didn't do," he told reporters Saturday.

But police say they have plenty of evidence against Hicks including the discovery of her severed head near his house. They also found two severed human hands, wrapped in newspaper, and hidden in Hicks' bathroom.

Hicks told cops he smoked crack and had sex with Null a couple of times but denies killing her. Hicks began working at Tobyhanna Army Depot in January. He told police he moved to Tobyhanna around the beginning of February. Hicks can't remember the last time he saw Null. Police say he was the last person seen with Null.

On Tuesday, Kimberly Lombardo, who lives near Hicks, told police a car matching the description of the suspect's car had been parked at Hicks' house for about six weeks.

On Thursday, police searched Hicks' car, a Mercury Grand Marquis, and found work boots in the trunk. One boot had red stains that later was tested and proven to be blood. Hicks confirmed the boots were his and when asked about the blood said, "I can't explain that."

Friday night Pennsylvania State Troopers swarmed Hicks' house in Tobyhanna. a day after a judge signed a search warrant for the residence. They are still on the scene at this time scouring the house for more body parts and evidence.

In addition to the head and hands they discovered, cops also found new black trash bags and a hack saw in Hicks' attic. Police describe the trash bags as identical to those found filled with Null's body parts along the interstate back in January.

Null, 36, was supposed to be an alibi witness at a robbery trial. She spent time living in both Williamsport and Scranton. On Saturday, police described her as being homeless.

Police looked for Null at her last known address in Scranton on Jan. 24 but were unable to locate her. Five days later, her remains were found in trash bags strewn along Interstates 80 and 380.

Hicks had several run ins with police when he lived in Texas. He was charged with assault in 2002, sexual assault in 2003, and robbery in 2007. In 2006, police in Virginia charged him with assault and drug possession.

Hicks was taken to the Monroe County Correctional Facility where is is being held without bail.

Police have made an arrest in the murder of Deanna Marie Null, whose dismembered remains were discovered along two Interstate highways late in January.

Charles Ray Hicks, 33, was charged earlier today and arraigned before Magisterial District Judge Thomas Schiffer before being committed to the Monroe County Correctional Facility, police said. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Friday before Magisterial District Judge Anthony Fluegel.

According to The Associated Press, Mr. Hicks, a former Texas resident now living in Coolbaugh Township, was charged with homicide, aggravated assault, tampering with evidence and abuse of corpse. He told reporters at his arraignment Saturday afternoon that authorities had the wrong man, the AP reported.

STROUDSBURG – State police are investigating whether the man charged with killing Deanna Marie Null was solely responsible for dismembering her body, which was strewn along Pocono Interstate highways in January, Monroe County District Attorney David Christine said Sunday.

Christine said state police have not determined yet if Ray Hicks, 33, of 131 Prospect St., Tobyhanna, acted alone or had accomplices. The evidence collected to date points only to Hicks, he said.

The cutting tools – a hacksaw and circular saw – found inside Hicks' home Saturday link him to Null's dismemberment, but there is no forensic proof yet whether the blade matches marks on the victim, Christine said.

The hacksaw was found inside a bag in the closet at Hicks' home, and the circular saw was in the basement, Christine said. They will be tested at the state police crime lab in Wyoming.

"They'll investigate the tooth marks to see if it was consistent to the hacksaw and straight blade," Christine said.

Hicks, according to police, was the last person seen with Null, 36, who was killed within several days of Jan. 19. She was last spotted getting into an older model sedan in Scranton.

According to the arrest papers, Hicks told police he gave Null money and drugs for sex, but he denied killing her. Null, a Williamsport native, had been living in Scranton for the past two years and at times had been homeless.

Null's body parts were found in eight black garbage bags with blue tie strings that were found Jan. 29 on Interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties, and her severed head was found 200 yards from Hicks' home.

State police said Null's hands were the only body parts found inside Hicks' house as they searched the residence on Saturday.

Hicks, who was previously living in Texas, was charged with criminal homicide, aggravated assault, tampering with evidence and abuse of a corpse, according to the state police at Swiftwater. He is being held at the county correctional facility without bail.

While it is not known where the circular blade found in Hicks' basement came from, investigators will look into if there is a connection between the cutting tool and his work, Christine said. Hicks was working as a sub-contractor to help with repairs on electronics for the Tobyhanna Army Depot since Jan. 2.

There were no further developments in the Null case as of Sunday night, state police said.

A wound analysis of Null's remains conducted by forensic anthropologist Conrad B. Quintyn, an assistant professor of anthropology at Bloomsburg University, suggested two sharp-edged tools were used in the dismemberment, according to the affidavit.

The Feb. 6 report revealed the deep incisions on Null's corpse were made with a sharp knife, but a mechanically powered straight blade, without saw teeth on the tip, was used for making accurate cuts through bone.

Hicks faces abuse of a corpse, a misdemeanor of a second degree, even though the cutting tools have not proved they were used in dismembering the remains, Christine said. The human hands found in Hicks' bathroom were enough to charge him under Pennsylvania law, Christine said.

The severed hands would indicate to state police that Hicks did cut Null up, Christine added.

The police investigation is still ongoing.

Sister says Charles Hicks did not kill, dismember woman

The sister of the man accused of murdering a homeless woman and dismembering her body in January says he would never do what he stands accused of.

"It's not my brother," said Charlotte Hicks, from Fort Worth, Texas. "He's one of the nicest people in the world. I'm reading all these things about him and it's just awful what they say."

State police arrested Charles Ray Hicks on Saturday and charged him with murdering and dismembering Deanna Marie Null and scattering her body parts in trash bags along interstates 80 and 380.

Charles Hicks, formerly of Texas, moved to Tobyhanna in January to work as an electronics technician at the Tobyhanna Army Depot.

In a call to the Pocono Record on Sunday, Charlotte Hicks said she learned of the charges against her younger brother through Internet reports on Saturday afternoon.

"It's just a big shock to see this on the Internet," Charlotte Hicks said. "From what I'm seeing there's a lot of different stuff and conflicting stories."

Hicks says that the original search for the suspect in the case focused on a black man between 5 feet 9 inches and 6 feet tall. She says her brother is shorter at 5 feet 5 inches tall.

But police say they have plenty of evidence against her brother, including a bloody boot found in the trunk of his car, a saw in a bag in a closet of his house and two human hands found in a plumbing compartment in his house.

Null's hands were the only part of her body not recovered by police.

"That's just not my brother," Hicks said. "He's done a lot of stuff in the past but if you look at his charges, those things were all dismissed."

In court papers filed on Saturday, police say Charles Hicks had previously been arrested for assaults in Texas in 2002 and 2003 and aggravated robbery in 2007.

"How could he get a job at an Army base with a record?" Charlotte Hicks asked. "All those charges were dismissed."

The Pocono Record was not able to verify Hicks' conviction history on Sunday.

Charlotte Hicks said she last talked to her brother over the weekend of March 1-2, a week before his arrest. She said nothing seemed out of the ordinary and he didn't sound unusual or nervous.

"We were having a conversation about my son visiting him up there," Hicks said. "He was talking about how cold it was and how different it was from Texas."

Hicks was charged with homicide, aggravated assault, tampering with evidence and abuse of a corpse on Saturday. He now sits without bail in the Monroe County Correctional Facility.

In a small city 12 miles south of Fort Worth, Tex. and 45 miles west of Dallas, Emma Hicks waited to hear from her son, Charles Ray Hicks Jr., who was charged with the gruesome murder of Deanna Marie Null.

She was expecting him to return home to Burleson soon. He started a job as an electronics technician at Tobyhanna Army Depot on Jan. 2, but it was supposed to be temporary, she said.

"I need to talk to him," she said in a phone interview Monday. "This is my son and it is very disturbing to hear something like this — and him being so far away from home."

Hicks, 33, rented a single-level, beige ranch-style home in Monroe County and it was inside that single dwelling, within walking distance of Interstate 380, that state police recovered the hands of Null, which, among other things, led to Hicks' arrest Saturday.

He is accused of murdering Null, dismembering her body and discarding it in garbage bags along two highways.

Hicks enlisted in the United States Navy in January 2005 for an 8-year stint — 4 years of active duty and 4 years of reserve. But after almost 15 months of active duty and schooling, he was discharged, said Navy spokesman Mike McLellan. He could not comment on the reason for the discharge.

During his time there, however, Hicks attended Recruit Training Command and the Center for Naval Engineering in Great Lakes, Ill. He spent some time as a student at the Center for Surface Combat Systems in Dam Neck, Va. before being discharged April 14, 2006.

Then, much like many former military people, the skills he gained from his training, allowed him to find a job at the Tobyhanna Army Depot through a contractor, Defense Support Services.

He has been fired since the arrest, said Rob Gross, a spokesman for the company.

"He was hired with us after a background check that revealed no prior convictions and after he passed a drug screening," Gross said.

The background check included felonies and misdemeanors.

However, police said Hicks had been arrested for assault in 2002, sexual assault in 2003 and aggravated robbery in 2007. Hicks had also been arrested in Virginia in 2006 for assault and possession of controlled substances.

Court records in Texas and Virginia were not immediately available Monday.

Friends of Null in Scranton's community of homeless and transient people did not recognize Hicks.

Dennis "Irish" Ingle, who was one of the last people to see Null get into a dark sedan that eventually led to the arrest, said he had never seen Hicks.

He only saw a man, who he described as having a military style haircut, from behind as he got into a car with Null that night in January. But that was not very strange he said, because people from more rural areas often come to Scranton in search of prostitutes and drugs.

"There's not a lot of tricks going on in the Poconos and if you're looking for that kind of stuff, you have to come to Scranton," he said.

Edmund Pisano, owner of Pisano's Smoke Shop on Olive Street said he used to see Null in his store almost every day. He did not recall seeing Hicks.

"I didn't pay attention to him individually," he said.

People across the region pontificated the murder Monday, and many talked about the death penalty.

In Monroe County, Aaron Lopez, 18, one of Hicks' neighbors watched the police and media activity from his home Monday.

"It was crazy that this person was so close. It's like the stuff you see on TV but it's in front of you," he said.

Lopez did not recall anything suspicious about the property or even recall Hicks.

Meanwhile, state police at Swiftwater and the Monroe County District Attorney's Office continued to gather evidence Monday from the house.

"Our main focus right now is tracking down the leads and focusing on the preliminary hearing," said Cpl. Lynn Courtright. "We have a lot of work to do yet."

Monroe County District Attorney David Christine said Null's family had been notified and he expected them to watch the progress of the case closely.

"We will do all we can do to convince the jury that he is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of killing and chopping up this poor victim," he said.

In the meantime, Emma Hicks said she has started looking for lawyers for her son and has considered a trip up north.

"Someone has falsely accused my son and I know that's the truth," she said.

TOBYHANNA – A suspected killer's toolbox with his name written on the handle inside Tobyhanna Army Depot is believed to be large enough to contain cutting tools used to dismember the corpse of Deanna Marie Null, according to federal court papers released Tuesday.

A search warrant was served Saturday at the site, where FBI agents seized the locked red and black Craftsman toolbox belonging to Charles Ray Hicks, 33, who is accused of killing Null, 36, and dismembering her body, parts of which were found scattered on interstate highways in the Poconos.

Two of Hicks' desk drawers containing various paperwork, binders and folders were also taken by authorities who picked up the items at the depot.

Hicks worked at Tobyhanna as a contract employee since Jan. 2, according to U.S. Middle District Court records.

On Saturday, security officers at Tobyhanna went to the first-floor workspace in building 72 assigned to Hicks after they learned he was a suspect in the homicide investigation, according to the affidavit.

Investigators will search the contents of the toolbox and drawers for evidence of Hicks' contacts with Null or for tools used to cut up her body, and capable of producing blunt-force and sharp-force trauma. A wound analysis of Null's remains was conducted by forensic anthropologist Conrad B. Quintyn, an assistant professor of anthropology at Bloomsburg University. He suggested two sharp-edged tools were used in the dismemberment.

Quintyn said the flesh and bone cuts were neat and clean.

"Consequently, this would suggest a mechanically powered saw," he said in an e-mail in response to a reporter's questions. "However, a hand-held saw could give one the same result if the body was cut while frozen."

State police found cutting tools, a hacksaw and a circular blade inside Hicks' home at 131 Prospect St. in Tobyhanna on Saturday.

Null's body was probably frozen when it was cut, Quintyn said, adding that there is a 50 percent chance that a mechanically powered saw was used in the dismemberment of the victim.

While a pair of human hands was the most gruesome find in a house rented by Charles Ray Hicks Jr., state police removed more than 130 pieces of evidence from 131 Prospect St. in Coolbaugh Township.

Bed sheets and pillowcases with a multi-colored comforter, white tube socks and a brochure that read "Hell fire: Is it part of Divine Justice," were among 132 items state police took from the home March 7, according to police documents.

Hicks was arrested on murder and related charges for allegedly killing and dismembering Deanna Marie Null, a drifter from Williamsport who stayed in Scranton near the abrupt end of her life.

Her remains were first found Jan. 29 by a state Department of Transportation employee. An expanded search led to the discovery of eight bags with Null's body parts along Interstates 80 and 380, seven of which were within 10 miles of the home of the accused. The eighth bag was found in Stroudsburg, about 22 miles away.

Several items normally associated with a woman were also found in Hicks' home. A pair of woman's blue jeans were taken from the basement. Eyeliner was found under a pallet along two walls.

Hicks is being held in Monroe County Correctional Facility without bail, pending a preliminary hearing Friday.

Charles Hicks, suspected of killing and dismembering Deanna Marie Null, passed a security check with an employment agency that serves the Tobyhanna Army Depot. The check apparently did not investigate deeply enough.

Hicks has a long criminal record stemming from incidents in Texas and Virginia. The Texas Intelligence Center turned up arrests for assault causing bodily injury in 2002, aggravated sexual assault in 2003 and aggravated robbery in 2007. Similar arrests occurred in Virginia.

A spokesman for Tobyhanna said the installation will review the way its vendors do background checks. A review is definitely in order.

TOBYHANNA — State police continued to comb the home and life of a Coolbaugh Township man Sunday who they arrested for the gory death of Deanna Marie Null.

Despite the insistence of his innocence by Charles Ray Hicks, 33, of 131 Prospect St., to police during their investigation, and to media after his arraignment Saturday in Monroe County, state police are sure they got the right man.

"We're 100 percent confident," said Trooper Craig Vanlouver on Sunday afternoon.

Hicks has been charged with criminal homicide, aggravated assault, tampering with evidence and abuse of a corpse in the death of 36-year-old Null, a drifter who lived in Williamsport and Scranton. He is being held without bail in Monroe County Correctional Facility, pending a preliminary hearing Friday.

Along with a boot stained with blood state police found in his car, a search of Hicks' home found garbage bags similar to those used to dump Null's body parts, a hacksaw in a bag and two human hands wrapped in the Feb. 4 edition of The Times-Tribune, and coated in what police believe to be cleaning detergent, according to a criminal complaint.

Details of the gruesome killing emerged after police announced the arrest of Hicks on Saturday.

An autopsy, performed by forensic Pathologist Dr. Sarahlee Funke, determined Null had been dead at least four or five days before her body parts were discovered at eight locations along Interstates 380 and 80 in Lackawanna and Monroe counties, according to an affidavit.

The affidavit also details which body parts were found at each location. According to the affidavit:

The lower half of Null's torso was found in the median of I-380 northbound in Clifton Township, Lackawanna County near mile marker 14.5 — the northern-most discovery.

About 10 miles south — at three separate locations in the median within a mile and half stretch of I-380 northbound in Coolbaugh Township, Monroe County — state police recovered a leg, an arm and both feet. The upper torso was found on I-380 northbound, less than a half-mile from the I-80 interchange in Jackson Township, Monroe County.

The head was discovered off to the right of the entrance ramp to I-380 southbound (Exit 8) in Coolbaugh Township.

An arm was found on I-80 westbound near Stroudsburg, and a leg was found on I-80 eastbound in Pocono Township.

All of the body parts were collected by state police at Swiftwater Forensic Unit and turned over to the Monroe County Coroner's Office. There was no clothing discovered with any of the body parts.

Now, investigators still want to know more about Hicks.

Trooper Vanlouvender said they believe Hicks relocated to Tobyhanna from Texas in January for a job with Defense Support Services at the Tobyhanna Army Depot. But they don't know if he lived with anyone else, what kept him occupied in his free time, who he might have dated and where he might have frequented.

"We want to know more about him. If anyone knew him or saw him, we want to talk to them," he said.

Hicks told police he had picked up Null on two separate occasions in his Mercury Grand Marquis while in Scranton, and on both occasions, the two had sex, according to court documents. Null also provided Hicks with crack cocaine, which they smoked together, according to an affidavit.

State police believe the last time anyone saw Null alive was with Hicks in Scranton driving in his Grand Mercury between Jan. 18 and Jan. 20.

Her remains were first found Jan. 29 by a Department of Transportation employee. A search lead to the discovery of eight bags with Null's body parts along Interstates 80 and 380, seven of which were within 10 miles of the home of the accused. The eighth bag was found in Stroudsburg, about 22 miles away.

The only parts of her body not recovered that day were her hands, investigators said.

Trooper Vanlouvender could not discuss many details, including whether authorities believe Hicks acted alone or with an accomplice and whether the murder scene had been identified.

"There is a lot in this investigation we just can't talk about," he said. "But we're still looking at everything."

Without a doubt, the help of the public made the difference in finding Hicks, said Trooper Vanlouvender.

After seeing media reports, it was a Scranton man who called Null's family, which led to an identification of the body Feb. 1, the trooper said.

"That can take years," said Trooper Vanlouvender about the identification. "And we got it in a short amount of time — before people had a chance to move around and before memories began to fade."

After identifying Null, several witnesses on Feb. 3 placed her with an unknown black male driving an older model blue car with a soft top and white license plate. A good enough description of the vehicle was given that a neighbor of Hicks linked it together and called police.

"Without the help of the public, we'd still be floundering," Trooper Vanlouvender said.

While state police continued their investigation within Hicks' home early Sunday morning, neighbor Bonnie Woehrl was feeding another neighbor's cat.

"This is a very quiet area; I couldn't believe it when I heard what had happened," said the 40-year resident of the area. "It's shocking for somewhere like here."

People can reach state police in Swiftwater at 839-7701.

Charles Ray Hicks, 33, is accused of killing, cutting up Deanna Marie Null in January.

TOBYHANNA — A district judge will decide today whether the case will proceed against a Tobyhanna man who state police allege butchered 36-year-old Deanna Marie Null before tossing her remains along Pocono region interstate highways in late January.

Charles Ray Hicks, 33, formerly of Texas, is scheduled to appear for a preliminary hearing before District Judge Anthony Fluegel in Tobyhanna, according to court records. He is being held at the Monroe County Correctional Facility without bail. Hicks' public defender, William Sayer, was not available for comment.

State police believe Hicks is solely responsible for the killing and dismemberment of Null, whose body parts were found strewn along Interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties on Jan. 29. He was arrested last week at his residence.

Hicks will have the opportunity to testify at today's hearing, First Assistant District Attorney Michael Mancuso and District Attorney David Christine said in a phone interview on Thursday.

Hicks denied the criminal charges filed against him at his arraignment March 8.

While it is not known if Null's alleged killer acted alone or had accomplices, Mancuso said the evidence so far in the state police investigation points to Hicks.

"We have no evidence to suggest that there was anyone else involved," Mancuso said. "As far as I know, he's not trying to say anything. He's not providing any other information."

A pair of hands believed to be Null's found wrapped in the Scranton newspaper, along with two saws and plastic bags with blue ties similar to those found on the highways, were enough to charge Hicks after state police searched his house last week.

Investigators found apparent blood dabbed on Hicks' boots in the trunk of his older-model sedan, which resembles the vehicle Null was last seen getting into around Jan. 19 in Scranton.

There is no motive or reason for Null's murder, said Christine. Police have interviewed Hicks' family, friends and co-workers at Tobyhanna Army Depot and have no evidence he confessed to anyone.

Authorities spoke with Hicks in jail this week, Mancuso said, adding that Hicks did not offer any knowledge of how the body parts ended up in the house.

COOLBAUGH TOWNSHIP -- Charles Ray Hicks, Jr. will go to trial in Monroe County Court for the murder of Deanna Marie Null, a woman whose severed head and dismembered body were found along the highway on Jan. 29.

Stoic family members of Hicks and Null packed into a small courtroom as forensic experts and investigators took the stand this morning at a preliminary hearing for Hicks in front of Magisterial District Judge Anthony Fluegel.

Witnesses recounted evidence that was recovered from Hicks' home. Investigators described Hicks as calm and polite throughout questioning. Trooper Robert Sebastianelli added that Hicks questioned state police as they transported him from the Swiftwater barracks to Monroe County Correctional Facility.

"(Mr. Hicks) said, 'So what did you find in my house?'" Sebastianelli recalled. "I told him, 'We found Deanna's hands.'"

Sebastianelli said Hicks then promised to tell him why he found her hands in his house once he had an attorney. Hicks remains in prison without bail.

Deanna marie null dismemberment case

April 6
A chilling profile

Crime fits pattern, expert says

<http://www.timesleader.com/news/17333919.html>

In the back of a prisoner transport on the way to the Monroe County jail, accused homicide suspect Charles Ray Hicks told state police troopers he knew why the severed hands of Deanna Marie Null were inside his bathroom.

But, he never said anything more.

That left investigators without an explanation of the murder and dismemberment of the 36-year-old woman, and why – if Hicks is guilty – he would discard all body parts but keep her hands.

Criminal personality expert Judith M. Sgarzi doesn't know but has a theory.

"He kept the hands, about all my guess would be, to use to please himself or to relive his fantasy of what he had her do before he actually murdered her," said Sgarzi, a professor of criminal justice at Mount Ida College in Newton Centre, Mass.

Sgarzi, an expert on criminal personality development and domestic violence, said a dismembering killer fits the psychological profile of a serial killer – a sexual sadist who has no remorse and commits crimes for pleasure.

She also suspects the body of a previous victim is somewhere out there.

While there have been no updates in the Null case since Hicks was arrested, Sgarzi believes a nationwide search for similarities into other unsolved dismemberment crimes may be under way. To search for patterns, Sgarzi said investigators will have to look at similar unsolved crimes prior to the Null case.

If police investigating the case know more, they're not saying.

That leaves the public still wondering about the circumstances surrounding the brutal slaying of the former Williamsport woman.

What they do know is that the woman's body parts were found in January – strewn across highways in the Pocono region.

Null's hands were found inside Hicks' Coolbaugh Township home in early March shortly after his arrest for the homicide.

The hands were wrapped in the Feb. 4 issue of the Scranton Times-Tribune.

Null's body parts were found Jan. 29 along Interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe County and 14 miles northbound along I-380 into Lackawanna County.

Both hands were then wrapped in four more layers – a bag placed inside a sock, an outer bag with detergent and another sock.

Hicks asked questions as he was being taken to jail following the arraignment on March 8, according to a trooper who testified at the preliminary hearing. He asked investigators what they found inside his home – and said they didn't find a lot of blood, the trooper said.

Sgarzi, who reviewed the master affidavit on the case, said she thinks the person responsible for Null's death and dismemberment is a disorganized killer who put the body parts out so they would be found.

Some of the body parts were found miles away from where Hicks lived, but some were found close his home. Null's severed head was located about 200 yards from Hicks' house.

"From the description I saw on the affidavit, it appears some of the body parts were found close to home to where he lived," Sgarzi said. "If this is true (that he did it), it is a sign of the profile of a disorganized serial killer."

Sgarzi said it is possible whoever killed Null led a double life as a serial killer who is a sexual sadist. The profile of a serial killer, she said, shows these individuals are loners who are pleasant enough to talk with people, but are leading a secret life that took root in childhood fantasies.

But, in time, the sexual sadist will play out his or her fantasies in reality.

Behaviors escalate over time, said Sgarzi,

"All of the research shows that whatever the crime, no matter how vicious, the fantasy is far worse," she said.

The Null crime, she said, "is definitely the work of one person."

State police have said Hicks' demeanor has been calm, polite and relaxed, which Sgarzi said is not unusual for someone who might fit the profile of a dismembering killer. Hicks continues to deny any involvement in Null's murder and dismemberment.

"If you watch interviews with the most famous serial killers, they are all calm and show little emotion, because they have no guilt – they have never developed it. That is what allows them to do this kind of crime."

Hicks, 33, formerly of Burleson, Texas, was employed as a subcontractor at Tobyhanna Army Depot.

At the time of his arrest, according to a trooper, Hicks said he was not on any medications but was prescribed psychiatric medications about five months prior while dealing with a "rocky" divorce.

According to court papers, Hicks' trouble with the law goes back at least six years:

- In 2002, he was arrested in Texas for assaulting a woman and causing bodily injury. The misdemeanor charge filed in Tarrant County was dismissed.
- In 2003, Hicks was charged with aggravated sexual assault, also in Texas.
- In 2006, he was arrested in Virginia for assault and battery and possession of cocaine. The assault and battery occurred in Hampton, where Hicks pleaded guilty. The cocaine charge was dropped.
- In 2007, he was charged with aggravated robbery in Tarrant County, Texas. The felony charge was dismissed in August 2007.

Sgarzi believes this shows a pattern of violence and anger.

"All assault cases are about anger," Sgarzi said, "but more important, about displaying power over a victim."

According to Hicks, he only met Null twice – and each time for sex.

Hicks told police he drove to Scranton in search of a prostitute. He said he had sex with Null on two separate occasions, and the two smoked crack cocaine, police said. He would give her drugs and money for sex and they would drive around in his Mercury Grand Marquis.

Null was last seen driving off with a man on Jan. 18 in Scranton, friends told police.

Null, a Williamsport native, had been living in Scranton for nearly two years, and investigators said she would work as a prostitute to support her drug habit.

His family members are steadfast in their belief that Hicks is innocent. They maintain he was set up and that he does not fit the profile of a dismembering murderer.

"No one fits this description until they are caught, and they are the least likely to stand out," Sgarzi said.

Sgarzi believes the information presented in the affidavit and the evidence gathered by police would stand up in trial.

The evidence: A pair of human hands, the bloody shoes found in Hicks' trunk and hacksaws found inside his home.

TIMELINE:

Jan. 18: Friends of Deanna Marie Null say they last saw her when she got into a car in Scranton

Jan. 29: Parts of a woman's body are found in several trash bags along interstate highways in the Pocono region and Lackawanna County

Feb. 4: Police identify Null as the victim in the human remains case

March 8: Charles Ray Hicks of Tobyhanna, Coolbaugh Township, is charged with criminal homicide, aggravated assault, tampering with physical evidence and abuse of corpse in the death of Null

March 14: Hicks is ordered to stand trial in the murder of Null

"...(I)t appears some of the body parts were found close to home to where he lived.

If this is true, it is a sign of the profile of a disorganized serial killer."

STROUDSBURG, Pa. (Map, News) - Monroe County prosecutors are seeking the death penalty for a man accused of killing a woman, dismembering her body and scattering the parts along highways.

District Attorney David Christine says 34-year-old Charles Ray Hicks Jr. tortured 36-year-old Deanna Marie Null in January. He says that aggravating circumstance justifies capital punishment.

Hicks pleaded not guilty at his arraignment on Tuesday afternoon.

STROUDSBURG — The dismemberment and scattering of Deanna Marie Null constitute aggravating circumstances in her January murder on which the District Attorney's Office is seeking the death penalty against Charles Hicks, who is charged with killing Null.

Hicks, 34, of Tobyhanna, was formally arraigned Tuesday in Monroe County Court, during which he entered a not-guilty plea and was placed on the September trial term.

Assistant District Attorney Michael Mancuso told the court that the DA's Office cites the murder, dismemberment and scattering of Null's body parts in trash bags along interstates 380 and 80 as aggravating circumstances. Mancuso said this is the reason the office last week filed a notice of intention to seek the death penalty.

Null, 36, a mother who lived at various addresses including Williamsport, was last seen alive in Scranton in mid-January, getting into a car that matches the description of Hicks' vehicle, according to a police affidavit.

Hicks told police he met Null in Scranton, when he went there looking for "girls to hang out with," according to the affidavit. He said he smoked crack cocaine with her and gave her money in exchange for sex on more than one occasion, but didn't kill her.

He said he was scared to come forward after learning she had been murdered because he figured she had been killed over drugs and that he himself might be in danger. He also told police he had been prescribed psychiatric medication in the past, according to the affidavit.

Police testified at a March preliminary hearing that they had searched Hicks' home in early March and found evidence including Null's severed hands, plastic trash bags and a saw.

The case against a Tobyhanna man accused of murdering a local drifter and scattering pieces of her body along area highways will take its next step toward trial on Wednesday.

In May, prosecutors announced plans to seek the death penalty against 33-year-old Charles Ray Hicks Jr.. He faces charges of murder and related offenses for allegedly killing and dismembering Deanna Marie Null, a Williamsport native who was living in Scranton before she was killed.

A pretrial conference in the case is scheduled for Wednesday in the chambers of Monroe County President Judge Ronald E. Vican.

A PennDOT employee discovered a plastic garbage bag containing body parts along Interstate 380 Jan. 29, touching off a police sweep that located seven more bags containing body parts elsewhere on that highway and Interstate 80. All but one of the bags were found less than 10 miles from 131 Prospect St., Tobyhanna, a residence Mr. Hicks was renting while working at the Tobyhanna Army Depot through a contractor, Defense Support Services.

State troopers went to Mr. Hicks' home after receiving a tip about Mr. Hicks' Mercury Grand Marquis. Friends of Ms. Null told police they saw her and an unidentified man driving around in a dark-colored, late 1970s or 1980s sedan just before she disappeared.

On March 4, a neighbor of Mr. Hicks called police and said he drove a car fitting that description. After obtaining a search warrant, investigators searched his car two days later and found a blood-stained work boot in the trunk.

On March 7, troopers searched Mr. Hicks' home and found Ms. Null's hands wrapped in newspaper and socks soaked in detergent. They also found garbage bags and twist ties that were "visually identical" to the ones used to scatter Ms. Null's body parts, according to court papers.

Monroe County Public Defender William Sayer, who represents Mr. Hicks, said he doesn't discuss pending cases.

"Nothing has been determined," Mr. Sayer said in response to a question about whether he'll take the case to trial, adding that he's met with Mr. Hicks and is preparing a defense.

Monroe County District Attorney David Christine did not return phone calls seeking comment.

Since his arrest March 8, Mr. Hicks has maintained his innocence. He remains in Monroe County Correctional Facility without bail.

Texas link to local murder investigated

DA reveals new angle in dismemberment case

STROUDSBURG — Police plan to visit Texas to see if there is any connection between a death there and a Monroe County murder case awaiting trial, the District Attorney's Office said during a Thursday court proceeding.

Charles Hicks, 34, is awaiting trial on charges of killing Deanna Marie Null, 36, dismembering Null's body, putting the body parts in trash bags and scattering the bags along interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe County. The District Attorney's Office intends to seek the death penalty against Hicks on the grounds that Hicks tortured Null, causing her death.

Defense attorney Bill Sayer had requested the court have the prosecution disclose what evidence it has of Null's torture, since this alleged torture is the basis for seeking the death penalty.

It was during a Thursday court proceeding on Sayer's request that District Attorney David Christine said troopers plan to visit Texas to see if a death there has any connection to the Hicks case. Police have been checking for any connections between the Hicks case and cases in jurisdictions outside of Monroe County, Christine said, declining afterward to comment further.

Hicks lived in Texas before coming to Pennsylvania to work at Tobyhanna Army Depot in January.

As for Sayer's request, Monroe County President Judge Ronald Vican gave Sayer 30 days to review the prosecution's information to see what evidence points to torture in the Null case and file any appropriate motions in response to that information. Another proceeding on the matter likely will be scheduled at a future date.

Null, a mother who lived at various addresses including Williamsport, was last seen alive in Scranton in mid-January, getting into a car that matches the description of Hicks' vehicle, according to a police affidavit. The scattered trash bags containing her body parts were found in late January.

Hicks told police he met Null in Scranton, when he went there looking for "girls to hang out with," according to the affidavit. He said he smoked crack cocaine with her and gave her money in exchange for sex on more than one occasion, but didn't kill her.

He said he was scared to come forward after learning she had been murdered because he figured she had been killed over drugs and that he himself might be in danger. He also told police he had been prescribed psychiatric medication in the past, according to the affidavit.

Police testified at a March preliminary hearing that they had searched Hicks' home in early March and found evidence including Null's severed hands, plastic trash bags and a saw.

DA's office: Hicks should be executed if convicted of Poconos murder
Toby man accused of killing Deanna Null, then spreading her remains along interstates

January 14, 2009

A Tobyhanna man accused of murdering and dismembering a Williamsport woman and scattering her remains along interstates 80 and 380 should be executed if convicted, the District Attorney's Office said Tuesday.

Monroe County Court will decide if the death penalty will be the alternative to life in prison for Charles Hicks, 34, if Hicks is convicted of killing Deanna Null, 36. If the court rules in favor of the death penalty and a jury convicts Hicks, the jury would then decide whether Hicks deserves life in prison or an execution.

Null, a mother of two, was last seen in January 2008 in Scranton, getting into a car matching the description of Hicks' vehicle, according to police. Null's body parts later were found in trash bags dumped alongside the interstates in Monroe County.

Police said they found similar trash bags, Null's severed hands wrapped in old newspaper pages and a saw in Hicks' home, as well as a blood-stained work boot in his car's trunk.

The district attorney contends that Null was tortured before death, and cites that as a reason to seek the death penalty. Defense attorney William Sayer in September asked the court to have the prosecution disclose evidence of Null's torture.

An omnibus hearing on the evidence was held Tuesday before President Judge Ronald Vican.

At Sayer's request, county Coroner Dave Thomas and Deputy Coroner Cindy Skrzypek were present. Sayer had planned for a forensic pathologist also to be present, but was not.

During the hearing, District Attorney David Christine and First Assistant District Attorney Michael Mancuso submitted a report from New Jersey pathologist Isidore Mihalakis supporting the torture claim.

Sayer said the court should dismiss the report as hearsay since the prosecution did not have Mihalakis present in court to offer live testimony. Christine said a trial, not an omnibus hearing, is the proper venue for live witness testimony to be heard and found credible or not.

"I'm not asking the court to rule on credibility," Sayer said. "I'm merely asking for the commonwealth to give as detailed an explanation as possible on what evidence and testimony they have so that Your Honor can make an informed decision on whether they have established prima facie (sufficient evidence)."

Vican said, "Those issues are not for us to decide at an omnibus hearing."

Prima facie is determined during a preliminary hearing at the district court level, prior to a case going to county court.

With that said, Vican granted the prosecution's request to quash Sayer's subpoena motion to have the coroner's witnesses testify at an omnibus hearing. Vican released those witnesses.

Sayer presented also a change-of-venue request for the trial to be held outside Monroe County, due to the news coverage the case has received here so far and the possibility of that coverage tainting potential jurors. Sayer submitted various local newspaper articles and TV and radio news tapes.

The prosecution said it doesn't object to the news reports being submitted, but disagrees with the reasoning behind the change-of-venue request. Mancuso said that's an issue that should be determined during "voir dire," when potential jurors are questioned about their ability to be fair and impartial.

The prosecution said it likewise doesn't object to Sayer's request for an initial amount of $10,000 to pay for a mitigation specialist. This is an expert who investigates and testifies on mitigating circumstances that support not having the death-penalty option.

Vican gave attorneys on both sides a certain amount of time to file briefs on their respective arguments. The judge will review those briefs and issue a ruling in the future.

Hicks said he met Null in Scranton and gave her drugs in exchange for sex, but didn't hurt or kill her. He said he heard about her being murdered, but didn't come forward because he feared his own life might be in danger.

No information has been released on how the evidence police said they found in his home came to be there.

Police continue search for human remains

January 30, 2008

State police continue to comb the sides of Interstates 80 and 380 for human remains on Wednesday, January 30.

Eight bags of parts from a butchered body were recovered Tuesday. Police hoped to use a helicopter for an aerial search today, but high winds make that impossible. An intensive search with 20 officers is planned to start at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Anyone with information is asked to call (570) 839-7701.

The remains of the light-skinned victim, possibly a woman, were scheduled for an autopsy in Allentown this morning. Body parts including a head and torso were dumped along a five-mile stretch of I-80 and 15 miles of I-380 from I-80 to the Lackawanna County line at Gouldsboro.

The remains were frozen, which may make it easier for investigators to identify the victim. But the parts were too badly chopped up for the victim's gender to be readily determined.

"It is a more challenging investigation because there are eight crime scenes. Having various scenes makes it challenging and time consuming," said state police Lt. Robert Bartal.

Police resuming search for body parts found along Pa. highways

SWIFTWATER, Pa. (AP) -- Police are taking to the air to search for more body parts after a severed head and dismembered remains were found in trash bags along two interstates in the Pocono Mountains.

A helicopter will be used to assist about 20 troopers on the ground as they search along Interstates 80 and 380, although the aerial search was called off Wednesday due to high winds, said state police Lt. Robert Bartal.

"We will be continuing (to search) for the next couple of days," he said. "We have a pretty large area."

A state road worker salting I-380 discovered a bag containing a woman's severed head about 9 a.m. Tuesday in the median in Coolbaugh Township, Monroe County.

The highway was closed and traffic was diverted as troopers combed the road shoulders and medians. They found at least eight bags containing body parts along five miles of Interstate 80 and 15 miles of I-380, stretching from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro.

Officials have said it is possible there are more body parts.

The victim's identity has not been determined. The remains were taken to Lehigh Valley Hospital, where an autopsy was scheduled for Wednesday afternoon.

Police were uncertain how long the remains had been along the highway. Bartal said Wednesday that troopers are reviewing missing persons reports for possible clues to the woman's identity, and are pursuing a number of leads.

Jan. 30--SWIFTWATER -- Police are trying to identify parts of a woman's body found in several trash bags along highways in the Pocono region and Lackawanna County on Tuesday morning.

The remains, including a head, were found in eight bags scattered 14 miles north and south on Interstate 380, near the Mount Pocono exit, and east and west near the exchange along Interstate 80, according to state police at Swiftwater.

"Each of the bags had various body parts in it," Lt. Robert Bartal of state police at Hazleton said. "We believe it to be all one person."

Police continued searching Interstate 80 in Luzerne, Monroe, Carbon and Columbia counties, police said. The remains were mostly found along Interstate 380 in Monroe County, in Coolbaugh, Pocono, Tobyhanna, Stroud and Covington Townships and Stroudsburg.

A state road worker first discovered one of the bags while salting Interstate 380 in Coolbaugh Township, Monroe County. It was reported to police around 9 a.m.

"When they stopped and checked it, they saw it contained human body parts," Bartal said. "We won't comment on what we've found so far, but they are definitely human body parts."

Investigators have not positively identified the woman described as light-skinned, Bartal said. Missing person files will continue to be examined for matches, Bartal said. He would not disclose if any of the remains contained identifiable marks or contained jewelry, like a ring or bracelet that would be unique to those who may know the woman.

"If somebody comes forward with some information we want to be able to verify any accuracy they might have. We'll see what the autopsy brings (today)."

An autopsy is scheduled to be held 9 a.m. today at Lehigh Valley Medical Center.

Anyone with information is urged to contact the state police at Swiftwater at 839-7701.

Headline: Body scattered along highways  "There's quite a bit missing' despite finds in open on I-80, I-380.

The first body parts turned up Tuesday morning in a trash bag a state highway crew found while spreading salt on Interstate 380 as an ice storm loomed in the Poconos.

In the hours that followed, state troopers found a woman's neatly severed head along the same road -- and bags of body parts at six other sites along I-380 and Interstate 80. They were scattered over 15 miles in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

"There's quite a bit missing," said state police Lt. Robert Bartal of the Hazleton barracks. "We believe it's all the remains of one person," a light-skinned woman.

Whoever dumped the bags of parts didn't seem to care that people would see them, Bartal said. Some bags lay just 20 feet from the roadway or in the grassy median. "There was no attempt to hide anything," he said.

It appeared the dumper drove up one highway and doubled back to the other, Bartal said. The person was on I-380 heading toward Scranton when he or she dropped most of the bags, and on eastbound I-80 near Stroudsburg when the other bags hit the roadside.

Who the dismembered woman was, and how and when she died, remained a mystery.

Troopers will review missing persons reports to see if they can identify her, Bartal said. An anthropologist will be brought in to examine the remains, and an autopsy is scheduled for today at Lehigh Valley Hospital-Cedar Crest.

At least one bag was found at each of the eight sites, and some bags contained more than one body part, Bartal said at a news conference at the Swiftwater barracks.

All but one of the body parts were found along I-380 and I-80 in Pocono, Tobyhanna, Stroud and Coolbaugh townships and Stroudsburg. A piece of the woman's torso was found along I-380 in Covington Township, Lackawanna County, said Bartal, commander of the criminal investigation section in Hazleton.

Both lanes of I-380 were closed after the state Department of Transportation crew found the first bag in the median in Coolbaugh about 9 a.m. Traffic was diverted onto Route 940 to Route 611 while state police searched for the rest of the body.

On his way to meet with troopers at the Swiftwater barracks, Monroe County District Attorney E. David Christine Jr. stopped at the undisclosed site along I-380 where troopers picked up the severed head.

"It was very disgusting," Christine said. "When they retrieved the head in my presence, it was gruesome. It appeared that the head had been cleanly sawed from the rest of the body."

About two dozen troopers from the Swiftwater, Dunmore, Fern Ridge and Hazleton barracks joined the homicide investigation, Bartal said. As part of the search, they checked I-80 in Carbon and Luzerne counties. They were still looking for body parts into the evening.

State police are asking anyone who might have seen someone dumping items along the highways to call the Swiftwater barracks.

Bartal said Trooper Robert K. Sebastinelli is leading the investigation and can be reached at 570-839-7701.

Autopsy fills in a few blanks on body parts found on highway

An autopsy on the remains found Tuesday along Interstates 80 and 380 has shed more light on the woman whose body was butchered and scattered in trash bags along the highway shoulder and median.

Monroe County Deputy Coroner Cindy Skrzypek on Wednesday officially labeled the cause of death homicidal violence. The manner of death is listed simply as homicide.

The woman, who has not been identified, suffered multiple violent injuries, any of which caused her death, according to state police.

While at least eight bags of body parts were found along the two interstates in Monroe and Lackawanna counties, quite a bit of her body is still missing. However, a vague description of the victim is forming.

Skrzypek said it was hard to tell how old the victim was. She was white with dark hair with some gray mixed in. She was about 5-foot-7 and heavyset.

Police say more details about the woman, including a likeness of her face, will be available at a later date.

"It will probably be pretty hard to make an ID," Skrzypek said.

Identifying the victim is a starting point for solving the crime, but in cases like this, it becomes the first stumbling block. For example, in 2002, a man's dismembered body was found in two burn barrels in Jackson Township. Skrzypek said it took nearly a year to identify that victim.

Skrzypek traveled along the interstate with police Tuesday identifying the body parts as they were found at eight locations.

When asked how first responders dealt with the grisly scenes, she said, "We treat the body with just as much respect as if it was a full body. We really try to do this with respect. It was a mentally challenging day."

The search for more bagged body parts continued Wednesday. "We will be continuing (to search) for the next couple of days," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said. "We have a pretty large area."

High winds prevented state police from using a helicopter, but weather permitting, police will fly over today for a better view of the interstate.

A state road worker salting I-380 discovered a bag containing the woman's head at about 9 a.m. Tuesday in the median in Coolbaugh Township.

The highway was closed and traffic was diverted as troopers combed the road shoulders and medians. They found at least eight bags containing body parts along Interstates 80 and 380 from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro.

I feel had we had the Troopers patrolling Routes 80/380 maybe things would be a lot different. I still say I saw a "leg" with a jogging shoe up on Rt 380 about a month ago- The next time I drove past it -it looked like rubbish on the median, right before the Penn Dot construction site. I have a vision problem & wear glasses. My 19 yr old said I was having an anxiety attach, he wears glasses also! I laughed & so did he when I said it was a killing field. We need more police, we need regular troopers stationed on the interstates.

We certainly need more police but stationing them on the highway would not have prevented this crime. What we may also need is a PSP major crimes unit in the area. I think the closest is located in Dunmore. We need highly trained officers here involved in investigations.

Hey Jack,

Thanks for the pics from your new neighborhood in Iraq. Maybe when you get back to the states you can get into landscaping in the gated communities around the Poconos. Looks like those pretty green sandbags with the reinforced concrete behind them will come in handy. Might want to upgrade your company vehicle though...

This will certainly cut down on crime, and drive all of us to the poor house. Stop trying to spend more money, solve the problems on the lowest levels, take care of the little problems and the big ones will go away.

It's a very sick society we live in and it makes you think twice about your family and there well being. If I could help, I would certainly be out there helping those officers. I would brave the cold and search with them for answers. God only knows how long they have been laying there, and with the cold air like it is up around here, it's very hard to determine that aspect. All I know is whoever was gruesome enough to do this, should have the same thing done to them.

I just drove 380 N from Rte 940 to the 81 split, I counted what looked like 5 black garbage bags at different areas on the right side of the highway. And they weren't tires. I was only driving 60, so I know what I saw. If bags didn't contain what the police were looking for, would they have just left them there or do people really litter that much that those bags were thrown out since the initial search or were they missed?

FAD: If you are referring to what I posted- let my clarify things- In New Jersey there are adequate State Police on the interstate 80- Here where they have 8 different crime scenes along rt 80/380 these State Troopers are expected to do everything from inspect School Buses to solve murders! It is a ridiculous system, all because the general public believes we are in the sticks.

I am sure Mario was asking for FUNDING for the additional police & not looking to dump the added expense on his voting public. Our area is considered rural with a HIGH CRIME RATE-we can not expect The State Troopers to continue to do two jobs and get one paycheck.

Why? Do they possess some magical powers that can help them identify the body sooner? Of course, they do have more experience with more crime?

First, you are all way out of line. I happen to know Cindy and I know she is in no way an idiot. She cares very much about people and is very professional. I guess it was never possible for someone to die naturally and then get chopped up? Who knows. Just lay off of her. This isn't easy for anyone directly related to this case.

editor - what color bags do the road crews leave on the side of the road? someone said yellow. About a month or two ago, there were about ten black bags alongside 80 and 33. I thought it was too cold to be doing roadside cleanup and I hadn't seen any crews in the past few days. Obviously, they were nothing, but shouldn't they be using marked bags of a certain color special ordered so we know. Especially after this?

Some of you folks are amazing, there has been a violent crimes comitted, few clues, very little concrete evidence to deal with, and all you do is take jabs at those involved. If your forensic skills are so sharp, go volunteer. I think the forensic psych from the FBI will give more hints than the evidence will, some of these guys are amazing.

What amazes me is that the state police, county sheriff and the local police depts have not put together a bunch of volunteers who would go out and do search and rescue. Other states have them to supplement law enforcement. I'm just a very big advocate of trained volunteers vs large paid bureaucratic organizations who just continue to grow and inhale tax dollars. It also might deter those from outside the area once word gets around that the people who live up here will get personally involved and in your face as needed.

Yea, but volunteers are very unpopular with bureaucrats and politicians, not enough money involved or status for that matter. The town I lived in in NJ tried every few years to take over the rescue and fire depts, every time the council swung to the democrats they tried so they could turn it into a full blown dept with budgets and tax increases with paid employees. Thirty years later they still have not succeeded. Volunteer organizations are part of what keeps the power out of politicians hands and pockets which is why they don't like them, you can't threaten a volunteer, they tend to laugh in your face and generally do a better job because they care and are not in for the money and graft.

Create a county sheriffs deputy organization with volunteers with the same 'perks' as fire and rescue like life insurance, disability, etc, train them and use them for run of the mill stuff to free up the paid LEO's. You get a 100+ or so volunteers and the academy would bring the course HERE to teach. There are enough retired military here in this area to form a brigade at least.

If I were the police I wouldn't want volunteers anywhere near a possible crime scene. You know you aren't looking for a live person, so the priority is to preserve the scene. Chances are, if this is some sick ---- that lives around here, he would be the first to volunteer, to get a kick out of watching everyone. Maybe I do need to stop watching television. Oh, and yes, it isn't normal to have body parts in bags on the side of the road, but it isn't an isolated incident. Just google dismembered body, you get about 1000 search results. The worst thing this whole thing did to me is make me realize people do this type of thing to each other quite frequently.

You'll notice I said 'trained' people, most city and high population police depts use academy students to search large areas, so what separates a 2 week academy student from a trained volunteer. It does not take being a rocket scientist to be trained in the basics of not contaminating a scene. Taking your point of view then the thousands of members of SAR teams get people intentionally lost so they can go look for them. Part of my EMT training in NJ when I lived and was stationed there were a few blocks of instruction on exactly that, try not to damage the scene unless it puts the patient in more danger.

Go south and west of here and there are volunteer SAR teams all over the place, equipped with ATV's, horses, 4 wheel drives and they get used quite a bit, mostly to retrieve lost hunters and hikers but for other things as well. People seem to think that because you graduated a police academy you are something magical, they are just people like you and me that work in the field of law enforcement, no different than most other people other than a sense of duty which 80% of the population lacks. Pa state police though, they have it tough, they are more alone than say NJ where a dozen troopers pop out of the woodwork and can respond within a few minutes, my hats off to our state police.

I think 99.9 percent of them do an amazing job. But what I was saying is, you just cannot trust anyone. To have non-police walking around a crime scene, could be the killer. Not that a cop couldn't have done it, but you just gotta hope on that one.

DeNaples indicted

Mt. Airy owner accused of lying about connections to mobsters

By MARC LEVY

Associated Press Writer

HARRISBURG — Louis A. DeNaples, the owner of Mount Airy Casino Resort in Swiftwater, was charged with perjury Wednesday for allegedly lying about his relationships with organized crime figures to win a lucrative gambling license, and state regulators quickly barred him from the business.

DeNaples, who opened Mount Airy in October, was charged with four counts of perjury after a seven-month investigation by a Dauphin County grand jury into what he told state gambling regulators during a pre-license background investigation. His company, Mount Airy No. 1 LLC, also was charged.

Contrary to DeNaples' statements to the Pennsylvania Gaming Control Board, the grand jury found that the 67-year-old businessman had close relationships with William D'Elia, the reputed head of a Scranton-area organized crime family, and the late Pennsylvania organized crime boss Russell Bufalino.

The grand jury's 23-page presentment said the family relationship between D'Elia and DeNaples ran so deep that, after DeNaples' father died, DeNaples gave his father's rosary beads to D'Elia. Bufalino once gave DeNaples the ring he was

DeNaples' rags-to-riches story marred by 1978 guilty plea, rumors of mob ties

Few insiders bet against Scranton-area businessman Louis DeNaples when he bought the shuttered and decaying Mount Airy Lodge resort for $25 million and declared his intention to enter Pennsylvania's budding slot-machine casino industry.

DeNaples, 67, had just about everything going for him: He was powerful, wealthy and well-known in northeastern Pennsylvania. He had given lavishly to politicians of all stripes. And his main competitor for a highly coveted slots license was an interloper from New Jersey.

So it was hardly unexpected when

Autopsy fills in a few blanks on body parts found on highway

By BETH BRELJE
Pocono Record Writer

An autopsy on the remains found Tuesday along Interstates 80 and 380 has shed more light on the woman whose body was butchered and scattered in trash bags along the highway shoulder and median.

Monroe County Deputy Coroner Cindy Skrzypek on Wednesday officially labeled the cause of death homicidal violence. The manner of death is listed simply as homicide.

The woman, who has not been identified, suffered multiple violent injuries,

COMING FRIDAY

- Criminal profiler gives his view of the case.

any of which caused her death, according to state police.

While at least eight bags of body parts were found along the two interstates in Monroe and Lackawanna counties, quite a bit of her body is still missing. However, a vague description of the victim is forming.

Skrzypek said it was hard to tell how old the victim was. She was white with dark hair with some gray mixed in. She was about 5-foot-7 and heavyset.

Police say more details about the woman, including a likeness of her face, will be available at a later date.

"It will probably be pretty hard to make an ID," Skrzypek said.

Identifying the victim is a starting point for solving the crime, but in cases like this, it becomes the first stumbling block. For example, in 2002, a man's dismembered body was found in two burn barrels in Jackson Township. Skrzypek said it took nearly a year to identify that victim.

Skrzypek traveled along the interstate with police Tuesday identifying the body parts as they were found at eight locations.

When asked how first responders dealt with the grisly scenes, she said, "We treat the body with just as much respect as if it was a full body. We really try to do this with respect. It was a mentally challenging day."

The search for more bagged body parts continued Wednesday. "We will be continuing (to search) for the next couple of days," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said. "We have a pretty large area."

High winds prevented state police from using a helicopter, but weather permitting, police will fly over today for a better view of the interstate.

A state road worker salting I-380 discovered a bag containing the woman's head at about 9 a.m. Tuesday in the median in Coolbaugh Township.

The highway was closed and traffic was diverted as troopers combed the road shoulders and medians. They found at least eight bags containing body parts along Interstates 80 and 380 from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro.

about his dealings with two figures in Philadelphia's recent municipal corruption scandal — Ron White and Shamsud-din Ali.

"I'm confident that the questions were clear, and that there could be no misunderstanding as to whether or not Mr. DeNaples understood those and he answered falsely," Dauphin County District Attorney Ed Marsico said during a press conference. "There are serious ramifications, and there should be."

Each perjury count carries a maximum penalty of seven years in prison plus stiff fines, Marsico said.

'This fight has only just begun'

Mount Airy Casino Resort spokesperson Kevin Feeley made no effort to hide his contempt for both the charges against DeNaples and the process leading them.

"I think it's outrageous but not surprising that this DA

(Marsico) would share his findings with reporters throughout the state, without bothering to give Mr. DeNaples the simple courtesy of notifying him of what was happening.

"To us it's just another example of prosecution by press headline, which has been going on in this case from the beginning," he said.

Feeley complained that leaks to the press put DeNaples at a disadvantage. "In reality we haven't had the same chance as many reporters have had across the state — not seeing the evidence to even comment on it," he said.

But Feeley said DeNaples was, in a way, relieved. "This is clearly not the best day of his life, but in some sense he's actually relieved this is out in the open and he will have a chance to fight the charges."

"Mr. DeNaples is glad we're finally moving from the rumor mill to the courtroom. He will prove that he is innocent of these charges," Feeley said.

And he added, "This is a fight that has only just begun. We intend to win."

DeNaples is expected to turn himself in within a few days, prosecutors said.

This is the second indictment handed down by the Dauphin County grand jury. The grand jury previously charged the Rev. Joseph F. Sica, a Roman Catholic priest and DeNaples' friend, with perjury. Prosecutors said Sica lied to the grand jury about his relationship with Bufalino.

Mount Airy to keep running

The emergency suspension of DeNaples' license allows Mount Airy to continue operating, but prohibits him from exerting control over it, profiting from it or even stepping inside it. The gaming board will decide next week whether to let Executive Director Anne Neeb's order stand, and Mount Airy's management, which includes DeNaples' daughter, for the time being will report to the agency.

DeNaples, whose interests stretch from banking to landfills to real estate, cuts a large figure in northeastern Pennsylvania, giving generously to schools, charities and political campaigns. For years, he also had drawn the attention of law-enforcement agents investigating the once-powerful Scranton-area mob.

The gaming board voted unanimously to license the casino in December 2006. Its exhaustive background investigation into DeNaples found nothing to prevent him from being licensed, the gaming board said.

He won the license despite pleading no contest in 1978 in a scheme to defraud the federal government and the appearance of his name in various state and federal intelligence reports on organized crime over the years.

Dozens of witnesses testified

Dauphin County prosecutors brought the case to the grand jury last year after reviewing information given to them by state police investigators, according to court documents.

Dozens of witnesses, including D'Elia and former Philadelphia Mayor John F. Street, appeared before, or gave testimony to, the grand jury. D'Elia is in federal prison awaiting trial on charges of money laundering and conspiring to kill a prosecution witness in a separate case. DeNaples did not testify before the grand jury.

In its presentment, the grand jury cited testimony from other witnesses to challenge DeNaples' statements.

For example, DeNaples told the gaming board he knew D'Elia only as a customer of his bank who occasionally patronized his auto-parts store. The grand jury said DeNaples had a "close relationship" with D'Elia spanning many years, that DeNaples was a guest at D'Elia's daughter's 1999 wedding and that DeNaples' unlisted home telephone number was found in an address book that police seized from D'Elia's car in 2006.

DeNaples told the gaming board he knew Bufalino "only by name." In the 1970s, the panel said, Bufalino gave DeNaples three suits to wear to meetings after his home was struck by fire. DeNaples also gave Bufalino, a mechanic, two junked Fiats to work on, the grand jury said.

Bufalino served lengthy prison terms in the 1970s and '80s and died in 1994.

DeNaples told gaming board investigators that he could not clearly remember ever meeting Ali and that he had no interest in Ali's proposal to ship waste from Philadelphia to DeNaples' landfills. The grand jury, however, cited a telephone conversation the FBI recorded in 2002 in which DeNaples told Ali, "it would be business for us and we'd be very appreciative if we got it."

DeNaples also denied knowing or doing business with White. Other witnesses recalled a meeting in DeNaples' office in which he "ranted" about not being able to reach White by telephone after he gave him $50,000, according to the presentment.

White, a key fundraiser for Street, died of cancer in 2004 before he was to be tried as the central figure in a separate federal investigation of Philadelphia's "pay-to-play" culture. Ali, a prominent Muslim cleric in Philadelphia, is serving a seven-year prison term that stemmed from the probe.

the Pennsylvania Gaming Control Board gave its unanimous approval to DeNaples in December 2006, awarding him a license after what it called an "extensive investigation" into his background.

But now that a grand jury has accused DeNaples of lying to the board about his relationship with a pair of reputed mobsters, the owner of the $412 million Mount Airy Casino Resort is under fresh scrutiny — as is the process by which Pennsylvania was supposed to shield its newest industry, slots, from organized crime.

"This particular license has been fraught with problems from the very beginning," said Rep. Doug Reichley, R-Lehigh, a slots critic. "It has raised a lot of concerns about the manner in which the license was awarded."

The gaming board has said that its background investigation of DeNaples turned up nothing to indicate he was of "unsuitable character" to own a casino.

Indeed, he came with a sparkling resume.

FROM HUMBLE beginnings (his family couldn't afford to send him to college), DeNaples built an empire that includes two landfills, an auto parts store, and interests in banking, real estate, garbage disposal, heavy equipment and scores of other businesses.

He has said he owns and operates nearly 100 businesses. His land holdings are vast. He's held seats on a number of boards, including Blue Cross of Northeastern Pennsylvania.

DeNaples is also a philanthropist, donating large sums to Scranton Preparatory School — where he sent his seven children — the University of Scranton, the Roman Catholic Diocese of Scranton, the United Way and many other charitable and non-profit institutions.

The lone blemish on his record, a felony conviction from 1978, did not disqualify him from getting a casino license under state gaming law because it was more than 15 years old. Gambling regulators did not even take note of it when they filed their official "adjudication" explaining their reasons for giving DeNaples a license.

But that case has long provided fodder for speculation about DeNaples' alleged ties to the underworld.

Prosecutors said DeNaples, who supplied heavy equipment to Lackawanna County to clean up damage from Tropical Storm Agnes in 1972, plotted with three county employees to falsify records to obtain $525,000 in federal reimbursements.

DeNaples was tried for fraud, but the trial ended in a hung jury when one juror — whose husband had been bribed by a reputed mobster — held out for acquittal. DeNaples subsequently pleaded no contest to a conspiracy count, paid a $10,000 fine and spent three years on probation.

An FBI investigation later revealed that James Osticco, alleged underboss of the Bufalino crime family of northeastern Pennsylvania, bribed the hold-out juror's husband with $1,000, a set of tires and a pocket watch to influence his wife's vote.

Osticco was convicted and sentenced to eight years in prison. DeNaples himself was never accused of wrongdoing and he denied having any knowledge of jury tampering.

DENAPLES' SUPPORTERS say he has long since redeemed himself for a 30-year-old mistake.

Sal Cognetti Jr., the former assistant U.S. attorney who prosecuted DeNaples, recently acted as a character witness on his slots application.

"You judge a man by his whole life, not something that happened 30 years ago and I think when you judge Mr. DeNaples by his whole life, he is an honorable person," Cognetti told the gaming board in October.

But while DeNaples has been able to put his Agnes woes behind him, he has been less successful at shaking persistent rumors about the mob.

Some of the information connecting DeNaples to the Mafia is contained in old reports by the Pennsylvania Crime Commission. The state agency investigated organized crime and public corruption, but wielded no prosecutorial power and was disbanded in 1994 amid criticism that it treated rumor and hearsay as fact.

Commission reports from the 1980s said that William D'Elia, a reputed member of the Bufalino crime family of northeastern Pennsylvania, sold space at DeNaples' Keystone Sanitary Landfill. Informants later alleged that DeNaples paid "protection money" to D'Elia.

According to a 2001 federal affidavit, one informant claimed that DeNaples and D'Elia met weekly for many years and that "DeNaples has become a rich man through D'Elia's contacts in New York and New Jersey."

While under law enforcement surveillance, D'Elia was twice spotted visiting DeNaples Auto Parts in Dunmore, according to the affidavit, which was filed in support of a search warrant for D'Elia's car and home. DeNaples was not charged, nor were his properties targeted for searches.

Prosecutors said DeNaples also lied to the gaming board when he denied any connection to the late Russell Bufalino, a notorious mob boss from Scranton who died in 1994 at age 91.

Bufalino was said to have helped organize the infamous 1957 summit of Mafia bosses in Apalachin, N.Y., which was broken up by police. A Senate subcommittee once called him "one the most ruthless and powerful leaders of the Mafia in the United States." D'Elia, who once served as Bufalino's driver, allegedly took control of the remnants of Bufalino's organization in the early 1990s.

Rep. Paul Clymer, R-Bucks, an outspoken gambling critic, says DeNaples' political connections were the No. 1 factor in getting a gambling license.

Campaign finance reports show that DeNaples has given heavily to Republicans and Democrats alike, pouring more than $500,000 into Pennsylvania politicians' coffers in 2004 and 2005 alone. Among the recipients of his largesse was Senate Democratic Leader Robert J. Mellow of Lackawanna County, who twice appointed people to the gaming board with at least indirect ties to DeNaples.

Anne Neeb, gaming control board executive director. The board said it was unlikely to revoke the license until DeNaples' due process is served regarding the criminal matter.

But whatever eventually happens to DeNaples and the casino is up to the gaming board, the agency that issued the slots license to DeNaples in 2006.

Pennsylvania's slots law says the gaming board can revoke DeNaples' license if it finds he has furnished false or misleading information to the board, not if he has broken any laws. But here's the catch. Gaming law says that termination of the license must be in the public interest. With almost 1,000 employees working at Mount Airy and millions in tax revenue pouring into the state treasury, closing the doors is a hard argument to make.

If a slots license is revoked, it cannot be transferred to another owner without going through the same application process that led to the original awarding of the license. The licensee's authorization to conduct slots operations is immediately terminated, and all fees paid are forfeited. That includes the $50 million DeNaples plunked down for the license.

Neeb, an attorney with an extensive background in gaming enforcement, served in the same capacity with the Louisiana Gaming Control Board.

The board's executive director can, as she did in DeNaples' case, issue an emergency order to suspend a license. But DeNaples has the right to request a hearing on the matter within 72 hours with either the executive director or the Bureau of Hearing and Appeals. And he also has the right to have a hearing with the full board.

If an event occurred affecting an applicant's suitability for a license, the gaming board's Bureau of Investigations and Enforcement would be asked to conduct an investigation. The findings would then be turned over to the board's Office of Enforcement Counsel, which would review the facts to determine if they are significant enough to warrant revoking the license.

If such a determination is made, the board would have discretion to hear the evidence or have the Office of Hearing and Appeals review it and make a recommendation to the board. A hearing would be held, and the board would render its decision. Once the board renders a decision, a licensee can pursue an appeal with the state Supreme Court.

Body parts search goes on AUTOPSY SHOWS DEATH A HOMICIDE. Eight bags of remains found.

ALLENTOWN | The death of a woman whose head and dismembered remains were found in trash bags along two interstates in the Pocono Mountains was ruled a homicide Wednesday.

Autopsy results show that the victim, whose identity has not been determined, suffered "multiple violent injuries, any of which caused her death," state police said in a statement.

Police planned to release more details about the victim, including a likeness of her face.

A state road worker salting Interstate 380 discovered a bag containing the woman's head about 9 a.m. Tuesday in the median in Coolbaugh Township, Monroe County.

The highway was closed and traffic was diverted as troopers combed the road shoulders and medians. They found at least eight bags containing body parts along 5 miles of Interstate 80 and 15 miles of I-380 stretching from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro.

Officials said it is possible there are more body parts and plan to use a helicopter to assist about 20 troopers on the ground searching for additional remains. An aerial search was called off Wednesday due to high winds, state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

"We will be continuing (to search) for the next couple of days," he said. "We have a pretty large area."

Police said the victim was white and heavyset, about 5-foot-7, and had dark hair with some gray mixed in. Her remains were taken to Lehigh Valley Hospital, where an autopsy was done Wednesday afternoon.

Police said they are not sure how long the remains had been along the highway. Troopers are reviewing missing persons reports from three states and are also pursuing other leads, Bartal said Wednesday.

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

Section: NEWS; Domestic

Length: 7141 words

Byline: Nancy Grace, Kareen Wynter, Rupa Mikkilineni

Guests: Ian Drew, Bethany Marshall, Susan Moss, Randy Zelin, Joe Jackson, Dr. Daniel Spitz

Highlight: Escorted by more than a dozen police officers and two helicopters, pop star Britney Spears is taken from her home to the hospital by ambulance for a psychiatric evaluation, this time reportedly at the behest of her own psychiatrist. Eight trash bags containing the body parts of a single woman are found strewn along the side of a Pennsylvania highway.

Body

NANCY GRACE, HOST: Tonight, breaking news. Music superstar Britney Spears's alleged string of wild and erratic behavior -- has it cost her custody, and now even visitation with her two toddler boys? A police convoy the length of a football field escorts the 26-year-old mom, once again strapped to a gurney, to UCLA's Medical Center, where tonight she's on a medical evaluation hold. Well, just weeks ago, Spears rushed to the ER after a custody stand-off at her own LA home. That late night drama and an emergency court hearing ended in Spears losing all and any visitation rights for her two little boys.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Breaking news. Troubled pop star Britney Spears is back in the hospital. Los Angeles police tell CNN they responded to Spears's home and transported her to a local hospital. She was apparently physically removed and taken by ambulance. You can see the video there. "The Los Angeles Times" is reporting Spears is being held on a 72-hour mental health evaluation at UCLA Medical Center. The paper is also reporting all of this was prompted by a call from her psychiatrist. This is the second time Spears has been taken from her home and hospitalized on a mental health hold in just a month.

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Does it hurt you in a child custody case if you had to be treated for a diagnosed mental illness? Does that affect whether or not you'll ever be able to be with your kids?

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GRACE: And tonight, live to the luxury resort destination, the Poconos. The police discover a real-life Dexter (ph) at work, dismembered body parts found in eight separate garbage bags, still unidentified.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Investigators say bags of body parts were found at seven other sites along Interstates 380 and 80. They believe the body parts belong to one light-skinned female.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

GRACE: Also tonight: Is there a break in the case of missing American teenage beauty Natalee Holloway? The 19-year-old vanished on her class trip to Aruba. A Dutch reporter claims months of high-tech secret surveillance will crack the case and prove what happened the night Natalee Holloway disappeared.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Prosecutors in Aruba say they're investigating new clues in the disappearance of Natalee Holloway. I know we've heard this before, but listen to this. They say they have new evidence from a Dutch crime reporter, and the information may help resolve what happened to the Alabama teen, which was one of the biggest mysteries in this whole thing. The prosecutor's office in Aruba says it is now intensifying its probe. Holloway disappeared while on a trip to Aruba back in May of 2005. A Dutch teen and two others were arrested and released a number of times. Prosecutors dismissed their case, though, against all three last month. They say there wasn't enough evidence to charge them.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GRACE: Also tonight: Galveston, Texas, the manhunt for a 21-year-old father intensifies after his tiny 3-month-old baby boy wearing nothing but a diaper is found dead by the side of an isolated boulevard, a carseat not far from the baby's body. Was the little baby thrown out of a car? Tonight, police tracking Travis Mullis, the baby's own father.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: You can see the outline, the scene of the crime. It's an area on Galveston Island where someone discarded a child's body. He was wearing only a diaper.

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: I've never seen nothing like this! Oh, my God, it's a baby! God!

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: The baby was found lying face down on Galveston's east end. Autopsy results show the child died of massive head trauma. Authorities tell Eyewitness News the baby did not from the impact of hitting the ground. Father, 21-year-old Travis Mullis, lived in this trailer in Alvin. The man who says he lives in the trailer says the couple was homeless, jobless and had no money. He says Mullis took off with the baby about 6:30. Mullis has not been seen since.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GRACE: Good evening. I'm Nancy Grace. I want to thank you for being with us. Tonight: Britney Spears reportedly back in a mental ward. What does that mean for custody of her two toddler boys?

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Right around 1:00, more than a dozen officers, most of them on motorcycles, several cruisers and the rescue ambulance came in through the front gate. They were in there for about 10 minutes before on the radio, you could hear, The package is on the way out, and then, Go, go, go and secure (ph) the gate.

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: What is happening is she's been put in for a 72-hour evaluation hold. There are several rights that she has. She can have visitors. She can refuse medication, which is an important thing. She can wear her own clothes. She can write to people. She can refuse to have her picture ID taken. But right now, she's being evaluated. It's (INAUDIBLE) thorough evaluation. It's a complete psychiatric evaluation. There's a full interview. There's lab work. And after that, the next thing that's going to happen is they're going to determine whether or not the legal criteria is met to have her held for another 14 days. It is possible that she will be held, that a judge will determine she's a danger to herself or to others, or a medical professional will determine that, and we may see her get the help that she needs, which I think, in my view, could be helpful to having her get some sort of visitation or limited custody of her children.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

GRACE: Or does it mean the end of any custody or even visitation for Britney Spears, reportedly once again in a mental ward. And what does it mean, "durable power of attorney," "power of attorney"? Not only are her custody rights in question, but her entire estate, amassed over years since she was a teen star in the hands of someone else?

Out to Kareen Wynter, CNN correspondent. What happened?

KAREEN WYNTER, CNN CORRESPONDENT: Well, Nancy, it was deja vu all over again. In fact, when I got the call this morning at 1:00 o'clock that this was breaking and that we needed to head out to UCLA Medical Center, I had to check the calendar. It felt like January 3 all over again, when Spears was initially hospitalized earlier this month.

Well, what we've been able to learn -- and we've just gotten so little information all day long. Lynne Spears, by the way, told some of the paparazzi that her daughter was resting at the medical center. Nothing from hospital officials, but TMZ has been reporting that it was her psychiatrist who staged this dramatic intervention, that things had gotten so bad that something had to be done, and that he even went as far as working with local law enforcement officials to orchestrate getting them in there. We saw the chaos that happened the last time, and the paparazzi right on her heels, following her on the gurney, following her as she was transported to the hospital, and that they did not want this the second time around.

And so they worked with police, and you saw what happened. It was a smoother transition to the hospital, where we believe she's getting the help that she needs in the form of mental evaluation, Nancy.

GRACE: Also with us, Ian Drew, editor-at-large with "US Weekly." Ian, the paparazzi are constantly camped out right there in her driveway, right outside her home. In fact, police have been there on numerous occasions over the last few weeks just to make them go away. That's enough to put anybody in the nut ward!

IAN DREW, "US WEEKLY": Exactly. And it's gone on for years. This is the thing. I mean, this is, like, over 10 years of this. And not only that, she's invited them in. It was a Pandora's box. She worked with them in the beginning. She sold photos of herself continually, all through her marriages and her children, and up until most recently was dating one. So she's let these people into her life, into her home, and it just gets worse and worse and worse. But we now see this is not the action of someone who's mentally sound.

GRACE: You're watching video from TMZ that broke the story today.

Back out to Kareen Wynter. Tell me where she is exactly. Is the family supporting her or being cooperative? What are the circumstances surrounding her going back into, reportedly, a mental ward today? Was her family supporting her? Were they against it? What happened?

WYNTER: To be honest with you, Nancy, we're not inside Britney's world, her camp. But it's this Sam Lufti, this manager/friend that's been by her side constantly in the last several months. He's really the closest thing to Britney. He's calling the shots. We see him accompanying her to court when she has her hearings. And so we believe that he's the one who actually worked, perhaps, with her psychiatrist to get things going here.

We've seen Britney Spears with the paparazzo who is allegedly her boyfriend. And he hasn't been happy about that relationship. But regarding the mom, Lynne Spears, she came back into the picture. Interestingly enough, earlier this week, we saw her come in. And you know, Britney Spears and her mom, they've had a very strange relationship. You know, one report will say it's back on, another report that it's struggling (ph). But anyways, they have reportedly been battling it out, Nancy. That's why Sam and Lynne Spears -- but we're told that Sam is the one that really, really worked to get Britney Spears back to the hospital.

GRACE: I wonder what's going to happen to her estate while she is in, reportedly, a mental ward, talk of a power of attorney or a durable power of attorney given to someone else while she is in the hospital. What does that mean to all those millions she has amassed?

Out to the lines. Leeann in Wisconsin. Hi, Leeann.

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Hi, Nancy. My question is, why have they let this poor girl go into this downward spiral for so long? And can they possibly ticket the paparazzi for harassment? I mean, it just seems like this poor girl can't get away from them, and she's going into this downward spiral.

GRACE: Well, that's an interesting thing, Leeann, because -- to Ian Drew with "US Weekly" -- Ian, I understand that several paparazzi were ticketed for reckless driving just recently.

DREW: Yes. I mean, the cops can only do so much, especially with the laws. But again, I need to stress Britney's someone who's let these people in. She used to tip them off...

GRACE: Ian, that is...

DREW: ... where she was going...

GRACE: ... no excuse for them following her so closely at dangerous speeds and switching lanes, to the point where police actually pulled the paparazzi over and gave them tickets. Do I have to say Princess Diana, Ian, for you to sit up and pay attention to what is happening to Spears? Yes, she's dating a paparazzi. So what? Does that mean she should be tracked down like a dog everywhere she goes? I don't think so.

To Bethany Marshall, psychoanalyst and author. What's happening, Bethany?

BETHANY MARSHALL, PSYCHOANALYST: I've got to stick up for Ian here because I think it's easy to find villains in this story -- the mother, Sam Lufti or the paparazzi. But for all we know, if she has a dual diagnosis condition, which is bipolar with substance abuse, the paparazzi may have become her support system because you think of bipolar -- there's hypersexuality, impulsivity, racing thoughts, mania, difficulty sleeping. And my understanding is she leaves the house at all hours, goes and drives, comes back home. There's no true errands being run, so there's kind of a restlessness that you see even with a -- either with a speed-based drug use or the hypomanic portion of a bipolar illness. But I think she may be using the paparazzi as, like, a false support structure, and that has to be replaced by the support structure of the hospital, like an inpatient psychiatric setting where she can get a full evaluation.

GRACE: Bethany, you mentioned bipolar and you mentioned various -- the possibility she's using various drugs. PS, everyone. You are watching the video from Hollywood.TV.

Bethany, she's under a 5150 hold. Explain.

MARSHALL: Well, what that is is an involuntary 72-hour hold. A police officer, a psychiatrist, anyone can call 911, have the police come over, evaluate her. She's held involuntarily until she's deemed that she's no longer a danger to herself or others. She can be released prior to the ending of the 72 hours if she demonstrates good mental health.

GRACE: Wait. I don't understand something, Bethany. If this had been planned for at least a day, this was not -- her going to the hospital today is not the result of some emergency. This was a planned trip to the hospital. So how can that be involuntary?

MARSHALL: Well, this is interesting because you mentioned staged intervention. I would imagine that her psychiatrist knew that he was going to have to call 911 or the police, and he put some careful planning in place so that it wouldn't so chaotic and so she wouldn't be compromised. But nonetheless, once she gets to the hospital, the treating psychiatrist or M.D. can place her on an involuntary hold if she is deemed a danger to herself or others. And at that point, there is nothing she can do, or the family or anyone else.

GRACE: Out to the lines. Ryan in North Carolina. Hi, Ryan.

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Hi, Nancy. I got a question. I'm on a cell phone.

GRACE: OK.

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: My name's Ryan O'Donovan. And I want to ask you a question. Who pays? Do taxpayers pay for all this? I mean...

GRACE: Excellent question. Bethany Marshall, psychoanalyst, do taxpayers have to pay for this?

MARSHALL: Well, no. I mean, let's say if you have insurance -- taxpayers could ultimately pay for it if you're destitute and you have no resources. But then you get shipped off to County or someplace where they have those kind of county beds available. If you have resources or a good insurance policy, they are going to take that insurance and you are going to be billed after the stay.

GRACE: The only thing, at this point, I can see the taxpayers being stuck with regarding the bill is the police entourage the length of a football field. That's more than the president gets when he comes to New York. Britney Spears had police protection the length of a football field.

Let's unleash the lawyers -- Susan Moss, New York, Joey Jackson, New York, Randy Zelin also joining us from New York. Susan Moss, weigh in.

SUSAN MOSS, FAMILY LAW ATTORNEY: For Brit, this is the best thing since the creation of the wig. This is just what she needs. She needs to go in and get the help. If she is bipolar, then she needs to be put on medication and she needs to be carefully monitored. That's the only chance she has of getting back access to see her children. This judge has been put in the position that for the best interests of the children, he cannot let her have access to these kids.

GRACE: To Joey Jackson. Address the issue of power of attorney.

JOEY JACKSON, DEFENSE ATTORNEY: Sure, Nancy. Well, initially, we have to say this. The power of attorney is simply a document which a principal, in this case Britney Spears, can give to an agent. Now, what happens, Nancy, is this. When you give somebody power of attorney, they act as your agent for all purposes.

Now, before you mentioned the distinction between durable and non-durable power of attorney. What a durable power of attorney means is that it survives any disability or mental illness you have. As long as you're competent at the time that you execute that document, as long as Britney Spears is competent at the time she executes it, the person who's her agent can, in fact, have influence over all of her financial transactions and everything else. Now, a non-durable power of attorney, Nancy, I don't think would be applicable here because that simply applies usually for things that are specific transactions -- a limited real estate transaction. Once that's done, it's over. So finally, you know, that's pretty much what it is.

GRACE: Right. To Randy Zelin. Let's follow up on something Joey Jackson just stated: You have to be competent to sign a power of attorney. If she's being put in the hospital, reportedly the mental ward on an involuntary hold, a 5150, then how can you say the power of attorney is written when she's competent?

RANDY ZELIN, DEFENSE ATTORNEY: Well, what happens is, if it was written before she's now been put into the hospital, if it's durable, it's going to survive any decision that she's no longer competent.

GRACE: Well put. Randy Zelin, Joey Jackson, Susan Moss.

Right now, we want to break in very quickly and go out to Pennsylvania, seemingly, real-life Dexter (ph) at work, body parts found in eight separate trash bags in the luxury resort area of the Poconos.

Let's go straight out to Rupa Mikkilineni. Rupa, what's happening?

RUPA MIKKILINENI, NANCY GRACE PRODUCER: Well, Nancy, I am standing out here in front of I-80 in the luxury resort area of the Pocono Mountains. And essentially, we're talking about eight trash bags found, a woman's body parts found in these eight separate trash bags. Actually, we're standing in the area where one of these trash bags was found.

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

Now, the identity of the woman is still a mystery, but here's what we do know. She stands approximately -- she stood approximately 5-foot, 7- inches tall, a heavysset woman, approximately in her late 20s or early 30s, and had dark hair with a little bit of gray streaks.

Now, the other thing that we know is that an autopsy was done yesterday, and according to the autopsy results, we know that she had been dead at least for four days prior to this autopsy.

GRACE: Rupa Mikkilineni joining us there in the Poconos, a luxury resort area. Rupa, where exactly were the bags found? Were they in plain sight, just thrown by the road, or were they hidden?

MIKKILINENI: They were not hidden. And in fact, this is a point that the police were making. They were in plain sight, strewn along the side of the highway. And we're talking about a 10 to 20-mile stretch of highway, Nancy.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: This is an involuntary commitment. One of three things can happen after the 72-hour hold. One is that she can be released, determined that she's not a danger to herself or others. I don't think that's going to happen. The second thing is another hold, another 14-day hold. Or lastly, the status changes from involuntary to voluntary. That's the best case scenario, that Britney decides, I need help. I need help. And that's going to bode well, if she makes that decision, for her child custody case.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GRACE: It's going to be a tough sell to any judge to give custody or visitation back to a mom who has been admitted to, reportedly, a mental ward twice.

To Dr. Daniel Spitz, medical examiner, joining us out of Michigan. Dr. Spitz, she told police that she was on Adderal. What is that?

DR. DANIEL SPITZ, MEDICAL EXAMINER: Adderal is a stimulant. It's an amphetamine. Generally, it's part of medications that are used for weight loss. And it raises the question, along with laxative use, which I'm aware that she was doing, that she's doing...

GRACE: Ten laxatives a day.

SPITZ: ... some extreme measures.

GRACE: Ten laxatives a day.

SPITZ: Certainly raises the question that she's having some serious issues with trying to get her weight under control and taking some extreme measures.

GRACE: What does it mean, Bethany?

MARSHALL: ... wondering if she has been put on bipolar meds, they weren't successful in treating her symptoms, she wasn't complying with treatment, so she has been abusing her own bipolar meds because sometimes with bipolar, you have attentional difficulties, which Adderal is designed to address. But sometimes people actually abuse that drug instead of using it how it's supposed to be used.

GRACE: To Sandra in Maryland. Hi, Sandra.

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Hi, there. How are you?

GRACE: I'm good, dear. What's your question?

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: My question is, this seems to be a horrible tragedy in the making. And why is this woman and other celebrities not protected by stalking laws, the way the rest of us are?

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

GRACE: You know, interesting. Out to Randy Zelin. When we say she's not protected by stalking laws, explain how that would relate to the paparazzi.

ZELIN: Well, I think the primary different is the intent of the following. When you think of stalking, you think of someone who's got evil intent to hurt somebody. The paparazzi, whether you agree with them or you don't, they're doing a job. You could almost argue they have a legitimate purpose.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Britney Spears is back into the hospital. We've been down this road before. And what we're hearing from law enforcement officials is that this was something that was actually in the works for the better part of the day yesterday, that this was reportedly an intervention staged by none other than her psychiatrist, that things had gotten so bad with Britney Spears that they just had to intervene to get her the help that she needs.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GRACE: Straight out to Ian Drew with "US Weekly." Ian, what is your understanding of what went down today?

DREW: Well, basically, all the reports are right. I mean, this was a staged thing. This was something that was meant to happen. And Lynne actually left the hospital today. Britney actually spent time sleeping because she'd been up three days, had not gotten any sleep, which exacerbated the whole problem. And the family showed up. They had been planning this since the last time she was in the hospital, and they finally were able to do this. And it's something they've been wanting to do for a very long time, and they're hoping that this isn't the end and that this doesn't result in a tragedy.

GRACE: To Matthew in Florida. Hi, Matthew. What's your question?

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Hi. I just wanted to say it seems like she's surrounded by parasites, and you would think that there would be one person, a family or friend that cares enough about her to try to straighten her out.

GRACE: Bethany, what about it, the people that are surrounding her?

MARSHALL: You know, it's very hard to tell. Probably some people are parasites and some aren't. Some are villains, some aren't. But when someone has a severe psychiatric syndrome and it's compounded by drug use, if that is what it is, sometimes it's very hard to get them to see that they need treatment. It's not like the typical addict, where you say they hit bottom. They just need to see they need help.

GRACE: When we come back: Is there a break in the Natalee Holloway case? The Aruban government once again ramps up the investigation.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED FEMALE: Investigators say bags of body parts were found at seven other sites along Interstates-380 and 80 forming what appeared to be a loop. Right now, investigators say they believe the body parts belong to one light-skinned female. Monroe County's district attorney David Christine says he watched as officers recovered a head from the side of Interstate 380.

The body parts have been taken to Lehigh Valley for an autopsy to confirm the sex of the victim, when the victim died, and to see if any forensic evidence was left behind by the killer. Police aren't saying if anything else was found inside the trash bags. A homicide investigation is being conducted by the Pennsylvania state police Swift Water. Investigators are asking for the public's help on this one saying if anyone saw a motorist throwing trash bags from a vehicle recently to give them a call.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

GRACE: Before we take you to Aruba and what could be a crack in the case of Natalee Holloway, the missing teenage girl from Alabama, let's go straight out to the Rupa Mikkilineni, standing by the luxury resort area, the Poconos. A real-life Dexter seemingly at work in the Poconos. Eight different trash bags of body parts found strung along the highway.

Rupa, question, what were the body parts?

RUPA MIKKILINENI, NANCY GRACE PRODUCER: Well, Nancy, the police won't get into details about the actual body parts that they are still missing, that they are searching for, which, of course, they spent most of today and yesterday searching extensively. Approximately 45 square miles around they covered actually in the last two days. That being said, the body parts already discovered in these eight trash bags. One is the head and the torso.

GRACE: Rupa, I understand an autopsy has been conducted? What did it reveal?

MIKKILINENI: It reveals several things, Nancy. First of all, the manner of death is being characterized as a homicide, while the cause of death is being characterized as multiple violent injuries. Now the police won't get into the details or specifics exactly what caused those injuries or what those injuries are. They said they have told something back in their investigation.

GRACE: How large is the search effort?

MIKKILINENI: Now we also know that the body -- approximately 50 (INAUDIBLE) are involved. We're talking about state troopers here, Pennsylvania state troopers, volunteer firefighters in the area. That's who's out today.

GRACE: I understand that.

MIKKILINENI: Now we're also talking about a search that included.

GRACE: I understand that they are including police, fire, canine units, helicopters and ATVs to crack the case. Body parts found near a luxury resort. Eight separate trash bags, Rupa. Is that true, canine units as well?

MIKKILINENI: That is true. Canine units and cadaver dogs were used today.

GRACE: Rupa Mikkilineni standing by.

MIKKILINENI: Now they didn't find any body part.

GRACE: Sorry, guys, I keep losing Rupa. Rupa's standing by there in the latest regarding eight separate trash bags of body parts. As soon as we hear more, we'll bring you up to date.

Right now to Aruba. Take a listen.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Could we soon know what really happened to Natalee Holloway? A judge crime reporter has given prosecutors brand new evidence. New info coming from Dutch crime reporter Peter de Vries, the same reporter who had Joran Van der Sloot threw a glass of wine in his face after a recent interview.

Van der Sloot's attorneys says the Aruban prosecutors have gone down this road before and found nothing, while Aruban prosecutors say they have intensified the investigation to finally determined what happened to Natalee Holloway.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GRACE: Is there finally a -- crack in the case of missing Alabama girl, Natalee Holloway.

Straight out to "America's Most Wanted" Jon Leiberman.

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

Jon, what's happening?

JON LEIBERMAN, CORRESPONDENT, AMERICA'S MOST WANTED: Well, Nancy, this journalist says that he has the case solved. He says he used undercover methods, undercover cameras, and that he knows the mode of how Natalee Holloway was killed and how her body was disposed of.

But look, we've been down this road before. We were actually with the Holloways down in Aruba searching for Natalee. There've been a lot of ups and downs. On its surface, this looks like a major development if it is indeed true that this is solved.

GRACE: Well, what do you believe it is, Jon?

LEIBERMAN: Well, you know, what leads me to believe that there is something significant here. Two things. One, Natalee Holloway's mother did indeed go and meet with this journalist and she seems to be condoning what he's doing. And number two, the prosecutors issued a statement today saying that there is major progress in this investigation and that it will be revealed Sunday night on Dutch television.

GRACE: Let's go out to the managing director of "Diario" magazine there in Aruba, Jossy Mansur is joining us.

Jossy, it's great to talk to you again. What can you tell us about these developments?

JOSSY MANSUR, MANAGING DIR., DIARIO: Well, you know, we're very interested, very excited about this news. This is unexpected. Now De Vries claims that he has videos obtained with an undercover camera operation that he conducted over a month and a half or two months and that he showed this to the prosecution in Aruba last week, probably gave them a copy also. And the prosecution is very upbeat with this.

GRACE: Out to Jon Leiberman with "America's Most Wanted," how long do you believe this secret surveillance lasted and who was being surveilled?

LEIBERMAN: We're being told that this was several months of undercover tape, hours and hours of tape. It's unclear exactly who was under surveillance. But what's interesting here is the surveillance, it appears, only took place within about the past year, which was two years since Natalee actually went missing. It will be very interesting to see what the smoking gun is here.

GRACE: So you're saying the surveillance took place during the last year, this past year?

LEIBERMAN: That's what it appears at this point, yes. And that's what makes it a little less intriguing is that it didn't start right around the time that Natalee went missing from what we're hearing.

GRACE: Tell us what some type of conversations that may have been conducted between the three prime suspects.

Out to the lines Barbara in New Hampshire. Hi, Barbara.

BARBARA, FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE: Hi, Nancy. Congratulations.

GRACE: Thank you.

BARBARA: You look beautiful.

GRACE: Thank you.

BARBARA: I just want to say I feel bad for the parents to have this all brought up again after last month.

GRACE: You know, to Bethany Marshall, it is, it's such a roller coaster for Natalee's parents. But of course, if there's a chance to crack the case, what do you think?

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

BETHANY MARSHALL, PSYCHOANALYST, AUTHOR, "DEALBREAKERS": I think they're motivated to crack this case and to see justice served. But I think probably they're maintaining their sanity by getting a certain amount of distance from all the breaking stories and so instead of being so close to it, they have to be a little bit more distant.

GRACE: Joining us is Detective Lieutenant Steve Rogers, former member of the FBI. Detective Rogers, question, what can a reporter do that the police can't do?

DET. LT. STEVE ROGERS, NUTLEY NJ POLICE DEPT., FMR. MEMBER OF FBI JOINT TERRORISM TASK FORCE: I'll tell you, Nancy, I'm puzzled over this whole situation with the Aruba police down there. Here you have a reporter conducting an investigation without the police working with them. Then you have the police coming out saying that they've got new evidence before seeing if it's credible, before seeing if there's any connection to their investigation. So I think they've got to, you know, connect some more dots and see where they're going to go from here.

GRACE: Let's unleash the lawyers. Joining us tonight, Susan Moss, Joey Jackson and Randy Zellin.

Susan, the reality is, the constitution protects you from the police, from the state, from prosecutors, from agents of the state. But it doesn't protect you from blabbing to reporters even if they're undercover.

SUSAN MOSS, CHILD ADVOCATE, FAMILY LAW ATTORNEY: Absolutely. The question is, when these conversations were recorded, did this guy have an expectation of privacy? Was he speaking to a clergy member? Was he speaking to his lawyer or something of that sort?

If he did not, then this stuff is probably going to go in because these reporters are not agents of the law enforcement.

GRACE: Agree or disagree, Zellin?

RANDY ZELLIN, DEFENSE ATTORNEY: Well, the big issue is that it's a brilliant tactic on the police law enforcement part because these guys is ostensibly, if they are the same targets, they have lawyers. So law enforcement can't deal directly with them because they're lawyered up. So use private people.

GRACE: But there is no indication, Joey Jackson, that police asked.

JOEY JACKSON, DEFENSE ATTORNEY: Right.

GRACE: .the journalist to do this, therefore, the journalist is not a state agent and therefore.

JACKSON: Yes.

GRACE: .no constitutional limits would apply.

JACKSON: Well, you know what? In a limited sense, Nancy, and here's why, because we all have expectations of privacy. The issues are going to be, where was this surveillance taken? Was it taken at a location where we don't have expectations of privacy? There have been some reports that indicate that they actually went into the home and they did surveillance there. That certainly is something that would cause pause for the admissibility of any type of surveillance.

GRACE: Everyone, when we come back, a 3-month-old baby boy found dead, thrown to the side of the road. Why?

Also tonight, APB, all points bulletin for special moms and dads. If you know one who's an inspiration to others, get your camcorder and go to CNN.com/Nancygrace, click on "i-Report" and enter that mom or dad in the "Extraordinary Parent Contest."

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

UNIDENTIFIED CALLER: I can't believe this. Somebody would do something like this.

UNIDENTIFIED 911 DISPATCHER: OK.

UNIDENTIFIED CALLER: Oh my god. It's a baby.

UNIDENTIFIED 911 DISPATCHER: Can you get next to the baby? Or is it down there?

UNIDENTIFIED CALLER: I'm going to it now. (INAUDIBLE) because I have never seen nothing like this before. Oh my god. It's a baby. God.

UNIDENTIFIED 911 DISPATCHER: It's OK.

UNIDENTIFIED CALLER: Someone (INAUDIBLE) here. Why would somebody do this?

UNIDENTIFIED 911 DISPATCHER: Headquarters station two. Need en route to Cherry Hill, first and (INAUDIBLE) Cherry Hill, first responder on a possible DOA.

(END AUDIO CLIP)

GRACE: The police on high alert looking for 21-year-old Travis Mullis, T.J.Mullis, the father of the little boy. But tonight we learn there's a felony arrest warrant for him that has nothing to do with the death of his baby. Also why is mom lawyered up.

Let's go straight out to Jon Leiberman with "America's Most Wanted." What's the latest?

LEIBERMAN: Nancy, in the past hour and half, police have issued an arrest warrant unrelated to this case. In the process of investigating the death of this little baby, police found something in Travis's home, excuse me, home, that made them issue an arrest warrant for him for a third-degree felony of enticing a child. We're unclear about the details of that case except it was clearly a different child than his son.

GRACE: To Susan Moss, in a nutshell, what is enticing a child?

MOSS: Well, unfortunately, what it could mean is doing some sort of activity to get the child to do something either of a sexual nature or other inappropriate nature. It just isn't good.

GRACE: And we also know that this is a result of the search on the home following the discovery of the baby boy.

Straight back out to Michael Board with WOAI Newsradio. Weigh in, Michael. What more can you tell us?

MICHAEL BOARD, REPORTER, WOAI NEWSRADIO: Well, we've learned a lot, Nancy, by reading the page on one of these Internet dating sites that she and T.J. were part of. You know, a lot of details we're learning about this as you searched through this. One of this -- it was a post that she made on this Web site. This was the 29th of December last year, talking about apparently there's some sort of argument between her and T.J. saying that she didn't like the way he was acting. He was apparently not friendly towards the baby, just hints, little things we're finding out that there may have been past problems in this relationship.

GRACE: So Bethany, how can you not be friendly to a little baby? I mean, what, the baby is having an argument with you? How can you not be friendly with a baby?

MARSHALL: As hard as it is for us to understand, parents who abuse their children often think that the child is unconditionally bad. Even if it's just that the baby is crying. And when the child is murdered at the hands of a parent, usually with the man, it's physical abuse and with the mom, it is neglect. And it follows an argument sometimes the man does to the child what he feels the wife is doing to him as sick and perverted that is. You stabbed me in the heart, I'm going to stab the baby in the heart. You are taking away everything that's precious from here, I'm going to take away your child. You're throwing me out like trash, I'm going to throw the baby out like trash.

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

So in a case like this, the symbolism of how the child is treated is very important.

GRACE: Out to the lines, Rosemary in Indiana. Hi, Rosemary.

ROSEMARY: Hi, Nancy. I'm so excited. Love you, love your show.

GRACE: Thank you. What's your question, dear?

ROSEMARY: I'd like to know why haven't they shown any pictures of the mother or focus more on whether she could be in on this or not?

GRACE: Jon Leiberman, why?

LEIBERMAN: Well, that's a great question. Police today told us that now she is being uncooperative with police and as you mentioned, Nancy, she has now lawyered up as well. She left out some key facts when she first talked to police, including the fact that her boyfriend, the father of this little boy, had dyed his hair blond recently which is a major clue in our business for tracking down fugitives.

GRACE: We are waiting to confirm the I.D. of the baby first before that is announced.

I want to go to Lieutenant Jorje Trevino, public information officer with the Galveston Police Department.

Lieutenant, thank you for being with us. Since the baby's face and head were so hurt in its death, how can you identify a baby?

LT. JORGE TREVINO, PIO, GALVESTON POLICE DEPT: Yes, the size -- there were serious injuries to the baby's head, but there was -- one side of the face was not damaged or not damaged so badly that we couldn't make -- that we didn't recognize that as the same baby.

GRACE: To Daniel Spitz, Dr. Daniel Spitz, are footprints used for babies like fingerprints are used for adults?

DR. DANIEL SPITZ, MEDICAL EXAMINER AND FORENSIC PATHOLOGIST: Yes. Obviously, you can't use fingerprints for a child. But everybody knows, when you have a baby in the hospital, they do a footprint. And if you have an idea who the baby is, you can take a footprint from the child and make a comparison using the hospital record.

GRACE: So Detective Lieutenant Steve Rogers, with the Nutley New Jersey Police Department, former fed with the FBI, Detective, how can you go back and create the timeline to determine who was with the baby at the time of death if the mom has lawyered up and is no longer cooperating?

ROGERS: Well, what they're going to do is interview family members, they're going to interview neighbors, they're going to interview friends. So that's how they're going to focus in on the timeline. And of course, having an attorney now is going to be a big problem for the police to overcome.

GRACE: To Brenda in Alabama. Hi, Brenda.

BRENDA, FROM ALABAMA: Hi, Nancy. Welcome to the wonderful world of motherhood and the ability and opportunity to love like you never have before.

GRACE: Man, you can say that again, Brenda. I've never seen anything like it.

BRENDA: I know.

GRACE: Thank you. What's your question, dear?

BRENDA: I wanted to know if anyone has noticed in the photograph of this baby, the right eye has an injury.

GRACE: Take a look at this, Doctor, Doctor Spitz. What do you see?

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

SPLITZ: You know, I can't. I don't have the ability to see that. But I know the child had severe head injuries. And the question is whether his head injuries were from, you know, inflicted trauma at a different location or whether the baby may have been thrown from a moving vehicle, I think. Looking at the injuries, the medical examiner shouldn't have much trouble in making a determination as to how the injuries were inflicted.

GRACE: Dr. Spitz, we'll get the photo for you to see and take a careful look at it like Brenda in Alabama has.

To Christy in Indiana. Hi, Christy. Christy, are you with me?

CHRISTY, FROM INDIANA: Hi, Nancy.

GRACE: Hi, dear. What's your question?

CHRISTY: I was wondering how could somebody just throw a baby on the road? I mean did they not care for this baby or was there something that the baby was sick or something?

GRACE: To Bethany Marshall, there is something very symbolic and tragic about just tossing the baby out like it's trash.

MARSHALL: I agree. And when I read the report, it's almost like he took the car seat and went, (makes sound), and just sort of jammed it down on the ground and the baby went flying out. What I can say for sure is he didn't do it because he had killed the baby and he wanted to then conceal the crime. This wasn't sort of a sleazy act of self-protection. There was a true rage attack and perhaps on some perverse level, even some enjoyment at inflicting further harm upon this poor innocent little baby.

(BEGIN AUDIO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED CALLER: No. The baby looks dead. I'm walking uphill and I can see a baby face down here and it's got a blue diaper on. I ain't never seen nothing like this before. Oh it's horrible. God it's horrible. Oh holy God lady.

(END AUDIO CLIP)

GRACE: A 3-month-old baby boy found thrown to the side of the road wearing nothing but a Blues' Clues diaper, thrown out with his car seat.

To Susan in Canada. Hi, Susan.

SUSAN, FROM CANADA: Hi, Nancy. I'm calling from Canada and I'm by far your biggest fan. My comment is there is no way one person could have done this by themselves. You know how heavy these car seats are, plus the baby inside. So it's just a comment and I'm wanting to know what you think about that.

GRACE: What about it, Jon Leiberman?

LEIBERMAN: I don't know. It's quite possible one person could have done it. The blunt force trauma to the baby's head and then, you know, you throw the car set out the window. It is pretty possible that one person could have done it and right now police believe that person is the baby's father.

GRACE: To Lieutenant Trevino, Lieutenant, where are you searching for this guy?

TREVINO: We are -- we have police officers, ma'am, all over the state of Texas and surrounding states, and we're hoping now nationwide on the lookout for this car, for this person. And now with the warrant of arrest, you know, they have all the power in the world to place him under arrest and contact us. So all over.

GRACE: Very quickly, Michael Board, WOAI Newsradio, isn't his hair now dyed blond?

Britney Hospitalized Again at Psychiatrist's Request/Body Parts Found Along Pennsylvania Highway

BOARD: That's what we learned and it's something we learned late in the investigation. When the investigators initially talked to the mother of this child, she gave him.

GRACE: Right.

BOARD: She gave investigators some information. But then later she said, oh yes, by the way, he may have dyed his hair blonde, which is something kind of odd. You know, you would think you'd tell that right away so you kind of wonder why, you know, she waited around a while to actually release the information.

GRACE: Everyone, let's stop to remember Army Private Adam Muller, 21, Vermont, killed in Iraq. Gone up with the 10th Mountain Division, arrived in Iraq just after Labor Day. He leaves behind a wonderful family. He's survived by parents and wife of 11 months.

Adam Muller, American hero.

Thank you to all of our guests, but especially to you for inviting us into your home. A special birthday wish to a Miami friend of the show. Happy birthday, Dolores, and many more.

See you tomorrow night 8:00 sharp Eastern, and until then, good night, friend.

Dumped body parts still unidentified

Authorities say victim was white with dark hair and heavy-set.

January 31, 2008

A woman whose dismembered body was found in garbage bags along two highways in the Poconos suffered "multiple violent injuries, any of which caused her death," authorities said Wednesday after an autopsy.

They said it's a homicide case but wouldn't be more specific about how the woman died.

Though her identity is still a mystery, more has come to light about her physical characteristics since her remains were found Tuesday. Police said she was white and had dark hair with some gray mixed in. She was also described as heavy-set and about 5 feet 7 inches tall.

State police said Wednesday they were getting tips and missing persons reports at the rate of three to four an hour and from as far away as Nevada. Parts of the woman were found along Interstates 80 and 380.

"We've been receiving a ton of leads from both in-state and out-of-state," said state police Sgt. Gregg Mrochko, supervisor of the criminal investigation unit at the Swiftwater barracks in Pocono Township.

Troopers were among those attending the autopsy Wednesday at Lehigh Valley Hospital-Cedar Crest. Police will couple the findings with other information to narrow down leads. People are still being encouraged to call with information, no matter how insignificant it might seem, Mrochko said.

The woman's remains were found at eight locations along a 15-mile stretch of the two interstates, primarily in Monroe County. A piece of her torso was found in a bag along I-380 in Covington Township, Lackawanna County.

The first bag was discovered by a state highway crew along I-380. Authorities revealed Tuesday that a severed head was among the remains, but did not disclose additional information about other body parts recovered.

Mrochko said police will conduct a more comprehensive search of the areas where the body parts turned up. It will probably involve state police aircraft and possibly cadaver dogs, he said. There was no organized search Wednesday.

State police investigators hope to develop a sketch of the victim to show the public. "A lot of that depends on the autopsy and what they come up with," Mrochko said.

Monroe County Coroner David Thomas wouldn't elaborate on the "multiple violent injuries" statement about the autopsy findings. Trooper Robert Sebastinelli said authorities aren't saying more because they want "to protect the integrity of the investigation."

Figuring out the cause of death will prove challenging, according to one local expert. Dr. Isidore Mihalakis, a forensic pathologist for more than 30 years in the Lehigh Valley and New Jersey, said it's difficult to determine how someone died when the remains are a head and severed body parts.

If the neck is there, he said, specialists can look for evidence of strangulation, such as bruises or a crushed windpipe. They also can look for inflammation, active bleeding, signs of the head having been hit. And doctors can X-ray the parts for fragments of metal that might have come from a knife or bullet, he added.

Mihalakis, now medical examiner for Warren County, N.J., is not involved in the Monroe County case but said he's performed autopsies on several similar cases.

One involved unidentified body parts buried in 1975 that had to be exhumed a few months ago. All that could be done in that case, he said, was to send blood samples from the various parts to a laboratory to be sure they all contained the same DNA, meaning they came from the same person. Police are still working on the case, he said, declining to say more.

ALLENTOWN -- The death of a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were found in trash bags along two interstates in the Pocono Mountains was ruled a homicide on Wednesday.

Autopsy results show that the victim, whose identity has not been determined, suffered "multiple violent injuries, any of which caused her death," state police said in a statement.

Police planned to release more details about the victim, including a likeness of her face.

A state road worker salting I-380 discovered a bag containing the woman's head at about 9 a.m. Tuesday in the median in Coolbaugh Township, Monroe County.

The highway was closed and traffic was diverted as troopers combed the road shoulders and medians. They found at least eight bags containing body parts along five miles of Interstate 80 and 15 miles of I-380 stretching from Stroudsburg to Gouldsboro.

Officials said it is possible there are more body parts and plan to use a helicopter to assist about 20 troopers on the ground searching for additional remains. An aerial search was called off Wednesday due to high winds, state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

"We will be continuing (to search) for the next couple of days," he said. "We have a pretty large area."

Police said the victim was white and heavysset, about 5-foot-7, and had dark hair with some gray mixed in. Her remains were taken to Lehigh Valley Hospital, where an autopsy was done Wednesday afternoon.

Police said they are not sure how long the remains had been along the highway. Troopers are reviewing missing persons reports from three states and are also pursuing other leads, Bartal said Wednesday.

Pennsylvania state troopers used dogs Thursday to search highways in the Pocono Mountains for any missing pieces of a body found earlier in the week.

By late afternoon, some items that might be evidence had been cataloged, the Pocono Record reported, but no body parts.

An autopsy was performed Wednesday, confirming that the body is a woman's. A medical examiner said she died violently and had suffered a number of injuries that could have been fatal.

On Tuesday, workers for the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation spreading salt found a head in a trash bag on Interstate 380 near Stroudsburg. By the end of the day, eight bags of body parts had been discovered along several miles of I-380 and I-80.

Thursday's search involved 52 state troopers and volunteer firefighters in three-person teams, aided by K-9 units and a helicopter. Some teams used all-terrain vehicles to scour highway margins.

The unidentified victim was described as about 5-foot, 7-inches tall and heavy. She was white with dark hair that had begun turning gray.

Cadaver dogs sniff for evidence as small as a few drops of blood

New York State Trooper Mike Boburka follows Wheeler, a veteran of the World Trade Center search. Sharp-nosed cadaver dogs — two from New York and one from Harrisburg — came to the Poconos to search for human remains.

Sleek German shepherds running along Interstate 80 are a rare sight, but these K-9 detectives had a special job to do Thursday.

Sharp-nosed cadaver dogs — two from New York and one from Harrisburg — came to the Poconos to search for human remains.

They spent an hour scouring a scrubby triangle of land along Interstate 80 just west of Stroudsburg. The patch was bordered by an on-ramp from Route 611. A bag containing body parts of a murdered woman was found there Tuesday.

Handlers were handicapped by the need to keep dogs leashed as traffic sped by.

"The dogs work better (off-leash) and can cover a lot more area. When they're leashed, we're holding them back. We have to duck and go around stuff," said Trooper Matt Johnstone of New York State Police.

His dog, JT, is 7 and is trained to scratch at the ground when he finds something.

"It doesn't even have to be a piece of tissue. It can be fluid," Johnstone said.

His partner, Mike Boburka, and 5-year-old Wheeler helped search for remains at the World Trade Center.

The high-energy dogs are driven by a powerful sense of play. After a search, Johnstone rewards JT with his favorite toy — a chunky piece of rope with duct tape covering the ends.

Gerry Miller, a deputy with the Dauphin County Sheriff's Department, brought Diesel to help search.

"Many times in a homicide case, until you have a body you don't have a homicide case. It's just a missing person. Finding a body is very important to getting a conviction," he said.

Cadaver dogs endure rigorous training so they can find as little as a few drops of a blood at a crime scene. In their certification test, they sniff five graves: three empty, one with animal remains and one with human remains obtained from a coroner's office or donated to a hospital for research, Miller said.

For training, Miller works with rolled up terry towels placed in a morgue to absorb scent.

The dogs go home with their handlers at night and revert to beloved family pets.

"I just love working with dogs," Miller said. "You can trust a dog 100 percent."

TRAFFIC CHALLENGE

One challenge facing investigators in the highway body parts case is the sheer volume of traffic that speeds across Interstates 80 and 380 through the Poconos every day.

The person who dumped human remains was one among thousands who travels these roads. But that also means thousands of other drivers might have seen suspicious activity that can help police find the culprit.

Sensors placed along the highways count vehicles.

The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation uses those traffic counts to estimate ADT (Average Daily Traffic).

Cops, dogs scour road for clues, body parts in case of dismembered woman

Police search along Interstates 80 and 380 on Thursday for evidence in the case of a dismembered woman whose remains were found on Tuesday along the highways.

David Kidwell/Pocono Record

February 01, 2008

Authorities raced against time trying to gather evidence Thursday as cars raced along the Poconos' busiest highways.

The gritty roadside gave up few clues as 52 police officers and volunteer firefighters combed more than 30 miles of Interstates 80 and 380 seeking remains of a dismembered mystery woman whose remains were found Tuesday in bags at eight locations along the highway.

No body parts were found. A pair of gloves discovered along the northbound exit ramp off I-380 at Tobyhanna were photographed, then placed in an envelope for later examination. Police don't know yet if the gloves are connected to the case.

A clump of hair, possibly an artificial hair extension, was found at the Sunoco gas station on Route 611 in Bartonsville. Police will analyze that, too.

The remains found Tuesday include a head and torso, and police hoped to recover more remains for a complete analysis of the victim. Cadaver dogs, all-terrain vehicles and a helicopter were deployed. The wide-scale search stretched from Delaware Water Gap to Interstate 84 near Scranton.

With sleet and rain expected today, troopers pressed to uncover evidence before it gets blown away by wind or carried away by animals.

"Time has transpired since the body was discarded. The more time that passes, evidence can be contaminated or disappear," said Capt. James Murtin, commander of Pennsylvania State Police Troop N in Hazleton. "If past precedent takes hold, it's going to be difficult to solve."

I don't see why everybody is getting so riled up, geeze, do any you have any recollection of how many bodies were dumped in NJ along Rt80 ? that was a weekly thing and thats not even counting how many are probably buried UNDER the old concrete. Thats not even counting the ones they didn't find.

When they were building Rt22 in front of Newark Airport in the 50's the mob would dump a body right at the edge where the last road was poured, cover it in gravel and the next day it would be entombed in roadbed. No doubt in my mind that it happened on 80.

What I'm thinking about now is whats in all those plastic garbage bags I see every Monday morning around here that get dumped on the roadside, that makes my hair stand up a bit. I think maybe we need a major clean up effort NOW to look this over. It would be a massive job for sure and I think that if you see someone dumping you need to take license numbers and descriptions, camera pic if possible.

And if you know these intricate details on how, where, and when the mob dumped bodies near Newark Airport, how come you never alerted the police? Editor!...is it me, or i thought you can identify a person with dental records? If a head was found, then what's up.... they cut the teeth out or something? well, i think it's safe to say whoever did this knew exactly what they were doing, knew exactly which parts to put in the bag so the person couldn't be identified. sounds like some freak playing a game with the authorities if you ask me.

Alright so, someone thinks that CSI the tv series has come to the Poconos and that in 45 minutes you can find dental records, put prints in afis, figure out who the victim is, and even find the killer. Wrong, yeah they found a head but its going to take more than a few commercials to find out what happend.

This whole thing is just sick! I moved from long island out to the poconos thinking I would get away from all the sicko's out there but I guess no matter where you live there's always got to be someone crazy enough to do something like this. A few people have talked about the death penalty. Honestly even if there were a death penalty this stuff would still happen. I don't think a person that does something as horrific as this actually thinks about the consequences or even the fact that they could get caught for it. If they were caught, killing them would actually cost more out of our pocket then letting them rot in prison for the rest of their life. I've done a little research on the death penalty. But anyway, I pray for the family and friends who lost this poor woman and I hope they find the psycho who did this to her! OH and for "crimjusmaj"... you mean to tell me that all crimes aren't solved in an hour??? well that just ruins the show for me! lol

February 01, 2008 6:00 AM

Authorities raced against time trying to gather evidence Thursday as cars raced along the Poconos' busiest highways.

The gritty roadside gave up few clues as 52 police officers and volunteer firefighters combed more than 30 miles of Interstates 80 and 380 seeking remains of a dismembered mystery woman whose remains were found Tuesday in bags at eight locations along the highway.

No body parts were found. A pair of gloves discovered along the northbound exit ramp off I-380 at Tobyhanna were photographed, then placed in an envelope for later examination. Police don't know yet if the gloves are connected to the case.

A clump of hair, possibly an artificial hair extension, was found at the Sunoco gas station on Route 611 in Bartonsville. Police will analyze that, too.

The remains found Tuesday include a head and torso, and police hoped to recover more remains for a complete analysis of the victim. Cadaver dogs, all-terrain vehicles and a helicopter were deployed. The wide-scale search stretched from Delaware Water Gap to Interstate 84 near Scranton.

With sleet and rain expected today, troopers pressed to uncover evidence before it gets blown away by wind or carried away by animals.

"Time has transpired since the body was discarded. The more time that passes, evidence can be contaminated or disappear," said Capt. James Murtin, commander of Pennsylvania State Police Troop N in Hazleton. "If past precedent takes hold, it's going to be difficult to solve."

Been hearing rumour that it's a serial killer, another head was found on Dreher ave., more than one body, authorities are not releasing information, yet, so as not to panick the public. Profiler: Killer probably likes infamy

By Beth Brelje
Pocono Record Writer
February 01, 2008 6:00 AM

What kind of person would murder, dismember and discard another human being's body on the highway?

"Someone with a need to shock and offend people," according to criminal profiler Gregg McCrary. "The suspect could have disposed of the body in rural areas and really delayed recovery or prevented it all together."

By leaving it on the side of the road, "somebody wanted it discovered," McCrary said. "This is someone who is not afraid to have the victim discovered."

The suspect is likely watching news coverage of a woman's body parts found in garbage bags along Interstates 80 and 380 on Tuesday. Police are still searching for more clues and have not yet identified the dismembered victim.

"He might enjoy the infamy while at the same time trying to avoid taking responsibility. Maybe he wanted to display the body where it would get public attention," McCrary said.

McCrary, a retired FBI agent, has 35 years of experience analyzing crimes and crime scenes and constructing behavioral profiles of unknown offenders. Today, he works as a consultant in offender profiling, victimology, classification by motive, crime reconstruction, and analysis across the country.

While with the FBI, McCrary, of Fredericksburg, Va., worked on many bizarre crimes, including a number of dismemberment cases like the one discovered Tuesday, in which a woman's body parts were found in trash bags dropped at eight locations along Interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

McCrary has seen it both ways in his career: Body parts found together and scattered around.

"It is a statistical probability that it will be a male offender," he said, but cautions not to get tunnel vision when it comes to theories for any crime. Investigators must keep an open mind because there are so many possible scenarios, he said.

"We need to know more about the victim. Was she a prostitute or a housewife? Did some guy get angry at his wife?" McCrary said.

He said identity is key because it can lead to where she was from and who she associated with.

It's hard to say if he knew the victim until she is identified, McCrary said.

It is chilling to think this may not be the killer's first victim, but it probably isn't, McCrary said.

"I'd be surprised if it was the first time he killed. It takes time to get comfortable around a body. This is not an entry-level sort of crime," McCrary said.

If it is his first, McCrary said, the killer is deeply disturbed.

"People tend to think it must be some crazy guy, some wild-eyed monster that drools," McCrary said. He also said sometimes it is someone who seems like a nice guy.

The fact that the victim's body was treated like trash, bagged and thrown on the road, may or may not be significant.

"You don't want to over interpret it too much," McCrary said. "To drive along and drop off body parts, at the very least, he didn't care. Perhaps he considers the victim to be nothing but trash and he wanted to show the world what a piece of trash this person was."

McCrary said the suspect may have felt wronged by the victim.

"Sometimes we see caring for the victim," he said, noting a suspect will place a pillow under the head and cover the body with a blanket. "It's called undoing. They feel remorse, they feel bad. In this case, that is totally absent. I'd be surprised if he were guilt-ridden about this. It takes some effort to dismember a body."

McCrary said investigators will likely look for where the dismemberment occurred.

"It will be some place under his control," McCrary said. "It is going to be quite a mess, and rich in evidence."

I find it interesting that there were so many bags, rather than the person trying to fit most of the parts into one or 2 bags. It's almost as if he changed his/her mind about dumping the body in one spot or several further away. I'm also wondering if this is a type of warning that the criminal is planning to strike again? It is very disturbing.

I KNEW THEY'D CALL IN A PROFILER. You might be right Cali...they might be trying to warn us all. My hope is that they make a bust of the woman and put it on AMW for this upcoming episode-that might help. By this time I don't think they are going to find anymore body parts with all the animals here in the woods-especially the deer. This is starting to get scarier, and I think the profiler is right...the murder is watching it all and enjoying every bit of it. I have always been against having a gun, but its time for us all to get guns. Im also making sure my kids go no where walking until this is solved. My city instinct is starting to kick in. God forbid he is among us. We all need to start praying!

Molly, deer are not carnivores, exceptions are some in Scotland that have taken to eating legs of small birds to increase their calcium levels or some other diet deficiency. This killer is probably a cowardly wimp with a limp little member that killed a woman and want some fame or infamy. Sick and twisted.

Hey Moll, you said this:

"By this time I don't think they are going to find anymore body parts with all the animals here in the woods-especially the deer."

I am just curious about the deer comment. What would deer have to do with body parts being dragged and possibly eaten? We have raccoons, skunks, domestic dogs and cats, bobcats and any number of other animals roaming at will that would be apt to claw open a bag and dig in, but the deer sure would not give a hoot about it. They are vegans.

I am not trying to be smart. I was just wondering if you had a point that I am missing. I woke up late and am still on my first cup of coffee, so I am a bit groggy yet.

I was thinking the same thing...

He also had an overbearing mother, alcoholic or absent father. He has a job that requires little to no contact with people. People probably don't notice him, though he can be polite and pleasant when the need arises...

Have I missed anything?

I was channel surfing last night and came across a documentary on MS-13. The pix they showed reminded me big-time of this case. The point about this probably not beng a first-time crime is that for most people, desensitizing themselves about what normal people consider abhorrant is necessicary; that's why even most serial killers begin by torturing small animals and work their way up to increasingly violent crimes.

There was a case in the 70s and 80s in the west. The guy killed three women and when someone discovered the first, in pieces, in an abandoned house, he decided to have fun with it I guess. Sick. He dismembered two more and left their parts all over town. They never found them all. They didn't find any of the genital areas. I am getting chills. When the police found the body parts, the guy went back and left more in the same place! Just to mess with them. If he was 20 in 76, he could still be able to do this. How creepy. He had a specific way of cutting, so it would be obvious if it was the same MO. If his last kill was in 86ish and he went away for a different murder, he would be getting out about now. But, it is probably just some hick mad at his wife and wanting to life insurance, so the body needed to be found. The sick thing is people cut up people quite frequently, which is why this isn't hitting big time news to a large degree. It is only news now if there are multiples. What does that say about our society. Most people though, try to bury or hide the body if it is someone they know. That is what scares me about this. You know people will suspect you first if your wife shows up cut up on the side of the road. AND you have to have some fearlessness to do this on a highway. It is obviously not a local woman that has other family or friends, besides the killer, or else we would know she was missing by now. It could be someone from out of town or just someone no one cared about, someone on the fringe of society, picked up at the truck stop, killed somewhere, and eventually dropped off here. It would be interesting to find out if she was pregnant. Someone has an affair or just knocks up a gfriend - number one reason women are murdered. Maybe the body was cut up so they couldnt find the evidence of a baby with DNA. Sooooooooo many reasons for this, we won't know till all the facts are in.

Something to think about huh??? Living here all my life I remember the Princess Doe story, to this day , no one ever claimed her, thank god for the people in Blairstown, gave the women a proper resting place ...still makes me wonder what kind of life they lead, that no one reports them missing ...tis a shame :(

ok brainiacs, farmers and farmetts. we can do this. let's solve this mess. now...1) there were 8 bags found. someone brought up a valid point, why waste bags and not stuff the parts in fewer bags. so obviously 8 must relate in some kind of way. 2) from the location the first bag was found to the last bag found, what area is that? i'm not too familiar with anything outside of East Stroudsburg, so is that only the Poconos the killer chose? this obviously means something. 3) maybe the fact that they can't identify the body is because he didn't want them to get too caught up on the person as oppose to the message behind whatever he is trying to make. so....were there teeth on the head they found?

"why waste bags"

I'm guessing when you kill someone, chop up the body, and dump it along a highway, saving a few cents by using fewer bags probably isn't going through the persons mind. Plus, it would be easier to throw a bunch of small packages rather than one or two large ones.

true that. i hate retarded killers. you can't really figure their azzes out. well....has anyone thought that maybe he had another victim in the car or truck or whatever and he didn't know that victim was in the back throwing out bags. then he realized, went and collected some, then had to turn around, that explains why the one bag found on the other side, and then it was just too many cars to pick up the rest of the bags. cause they said it is more parts of the body missing. so where is the rest. or is this far out and i watch too much CSI?

shemeka, yes too much csi! I highly doubt a second victim is throwing human body parts out a guy's car and he doesn't know it for a while, then picks some of it up, but leaves the head. They may never tell us details about all the ways the body was cut etc. That way they can verify when they find someone of interest. Only the cops and killer would know. Plus, if another body is found and they have released all the details, no way to know if it is a copycat. Now I have been watching too much CSI! They do that occasionally and while I understand it, it always annoys me! I am curious by nature. Dental records are only good if you have a comparison. If you have an idea who it is. I am sure they are comparing records, if there are teeth, to the missing persons that possibly match her description. But you cannot exactly go around checking the dental records of every person who may or may not be missing in the country. I know you didn't say that Shemeka, someone else asked if they were identifying her by dental records.

Lets just all agree that this isnt CSI. It is going to take them more then 45 minutes (previously stated) to find out who the woman is, where shes from, what tool chopped her up, and what seemingly normal guy/girl did this to her. Lets sit back, lock our doors and wait. Thats all we can do is wait, it isnt going to help anyone by sitting here as a bunch of amateurs trying to figure out what happend. If were going to do that, we should go buy the CSI game for play station, very good game, keeps you occupied.

They can use dental records to ID a person, but there is no data base containing dental records of everyone they can "mass scan". Dental records are useful to confirm identity, not to figure out the ID of someone when you have no idea of who they are.

pacharlie. I am not picking on you. I corrected three people. And grammar doesn't show whether a person is intelligent or not, it is a learned skill. So, the more people correct others and practice, the better it will get. It is something I stunk at as a kid, we never studied grammar until I was in 7th grade, so it frustrates me when others are screwing it up too! I know I was grateful when someone finally started to teach me all the differences and without reminders, I would have forgotten by now. My brother has a learning disability, but that kid is WAY smarter than I am. It is a pet peeve. Kids nowadays, just look at some of the obituary posts for that COCO girl have no idea how to spell anything and no one seems to care. Why is it ok to make fun of the PR for spelling and grammar errors but not okay to correct people in the PR's forum? There is discussing and just nitpicking what people say even though you know exactly what they mean. I know, I have done both.

I look at it this way windgap- forums function more like normal oral conversation than say, a book or college paper. Would you correct someone because they had a speech impediment or spoke with an accent when speaking to you? Don't sweat the small stuff. Responses here are often hurried and we are all human. If you understand the intent of the poster, that's all that's needed.

1234 - That is how I always work, but there were 6 mistakes in a minute by 3 different people, all the same thing, and I felt it needed addressing. I make typos all the time. Some of them very amusing. And I did have a speech impediment (severe head trauma), and yes, people corrected me and I was happy they did. Kept me motivated.

As far as I know, no head was found on Dreher Ave.

Well if the killer is reading this forum I'm sure we have him all confused now. We've gone so far off topic that he/she/it doesn't even come into the conversation anymore, his 5 minutes of fame are up I guess.

Oh and wind, someone said yesterday that they saw a hand sticking out of one of the bags, whether that's true or not I don't know.

Freedom of speech means the freedom to disagree.

knightbear, i will agree not to correct your grammar if shemeka agrees not to say you harass her because you are a female. I think we can agree on this!

Dreher ave was some idiot's rumor they started here earlier. They said a head was found. My husband is the delivery driver for that area and drives up and down it, and no head, talk of a head, or yellow tape where a head may have been!

If you have time, and with my injury, I have nothing but, just google "dismembered body". If it is the spouse, they are found either in a fridge and the person fled, or the body is found buried, dropped in woods, or in a lake/river. Serial killers leave bodies to be found. Unless you are a japanese kid, then you just bring your mom's head to show and tell!

That would be interesting to know. About the median. I know something w. median, but I thought most of it was on the shoulder. I say it and I feel so l her was on the shoulder. That doesn't make me feel any better! I know abc saw black bags, same thing, most on the one shoulder, one in the median, shoulder. But, don't we see that all the time, trash pick up? I thought some about it, but my husband made fun of me. I was raised to be paranoid! My to think I was small and easily kidnapped! That thought has never left and few situations!

Yes I think that they have a lot of people working on this case, and when they find her identity hopefully it will open many doors for them. The body was frozen before it was cut up so it may have happened many weeks ago. I think if someone was missing in this proximity she would have been noticed, right?

I agree with you that there is a point that this suspect is trying to make. There is word that the body was frozen, whether it was due to the temps outside or prior freezing. Maybe this person waited till a certain time to discard of victim. If you ever watch cases on tv a lot of vics left to be found on roads & vics that have been missing a while. I agree with profiler. I also believe this suspect will not discard of weapon used. I think there will be clues left again but elsewhere. If the suspect is reading these he knows that their focus is on identifying vic not as much as searching for the simple clues in the oddest places. What about those rest areas. I'm sure the forensic team has people comparing the garbage bags for manufacturer and possible places where they were sold. I will be following this case.

Like another person wrote, there could be two people -- one to drive and one to discard. Maybe they/ one person pulled over? A lot depends on what side of the road the bags were found, there is also a possibility of it being two different bodies. Somethings I heard outside of the paper makes me think that is a good possibility.

It isn't so much that the authorities don't care as much about finding the evidence as they do finding out who the vic is. They are both vital parts of the investigation. The media and this forum (im guilty of it) are what is making it seem like finding out her identity is what everyone is more focused on.

Sick as this may sound, maybe he is keeping parts as souvenirs. It has happened before. I feel the same way about watching too much CSI. Also if you look where that last bag was dropped off, that may have pulled off road to make sure all was out of car and noticed they forgot one. That area is a great place to turn back around. Poss for so many bags is to make it a little less noticeable or like profiler said to make a point of hatred toward vic. Another possibility is a very small car w/ little trunk space.

"killer is probably enjoying the infamy"?? Well maybe that person/s should think about how the gap in drop off sights make things look. Maybe the person/ s screwed up. This could show signs of weak ness or disorganization. If they are this disorganized with the drop off, how about the initial crime. I bet there is atleast two locations crawling with evidence! Just a matter of finding it.

I don't necessarily think they were disorganized. I think the dropoff spacing was due to passing vehicles. 80/380 in that stretch is a virtual ghost town in the wee hours of the morning. It would appear to me that perhaps they were dropping bags at points that there were no vehicles coming either way. It would be my opinion that they were not alone in doing so either - it would seem to me that perhaps one person was driving, while at least one other was tossing bags so they did not need to fully stop in case a vehicle came up behind them or the other way.

I can understand why you would agree with AuntieEm. I didn't really mean to sound like I was not agreeing with her. It may not be a serial killer, we don't know. It could be someone that just panicked. Most criminals are not very intelligent. The person that did this crime may not even live in this area. Let's hope. I understand that we do not know either way so it is probably better to be safe, be cautious, and keep our eyes open.

The killer could just as easily have committed the crime in a very far away place, driven across many states, disposed of the body in the general locale (keeping moving so as to remain unnoticed.....someone could id a stopped car) and turned around and driven back where they came from. For MY sake I hope he's far away, but I pray for the women around him, where ever he is.....let's face it, 99.9 percent this is some bizarre predatory male, unless its some cult sacrifice thing. Anyway, God rest her soul, and may her journey wherever she is now be more peaceful than the one she experienced in life.

yep. and whatever is going on with these bodies, this killer is obviously playing a game. everything always means something in their game playing. that why i suggested before that maybe the amount of bags means something. or maybe the first drop off point to the last drop off point means something. we just never know. or maybe it can means nothing. but i hope they are laying everything out on the table for this one and not overlooking anything. cause overlooking something means the next victim.

As to the idea that criminals not being intelligent, that's not necessarily true. Many times a killer that is this organized and so disturbed as to cut up a body and place it in seperate trash bags and dump them along the road and not be noticed, turns out to have an average to sometimes even an above average IQ and certainly not be percieved as being a killer. They can completely slip under the radar as a normal person rather than being a homicidal maniac.

Cops search for clues along Interstate 80 near Stroudsburg on Thursday as part of the body parts case.

By Beth Breije
Pocono Record Writer
February 01, 2008

What kind of person would murder, dismember and discard another human being's body on the highway?

"Someone with a need to shock and offend people," according to criminal profiler Gregg McCrary. "The suspect could have disposed of the body in rural areas and really delayed recovery or prevented it all together."

By leaving it on the side of the road, "somebody wanted it discovered," McCrary said. "This is someone who is not afraid to have the victim discovered."

The suspect is likely watching news coverage of a woman's body parts found in garbage bags along Interstates 80 and 380 on Tuesday. Police are still searching for more clues and have not yet identified the dismembered victim.

"He might enjoy the infamy while at the same time trying to avoid taking responsibility. Maybe he wanted to display the body where it would get public attention," McCrary said.

McCrary, a retired FBI agent, has 35 years of experience analyzing crimes and crime scenes and constructing behavioral profiles of unknown offenders. Today, he works as a consultant in offender profiling, victimology, classification by motive, crime reconstruction, and analysis across the country.

While with the FBI, McCrary, of Fredericksburg, Va., worked on many bizarre crimes, including a number of dismemberment cases like the one discovered Tuesday, in which a woman's body parts were found in trash bags dropped at eight locations along Interstates 80 and 380 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

McCrary has seen it both ways in his career: Body parts found together and scattered around.

"It is a statistical probability that it will be a male offender," he said, but cautions not to get tunnel-vision when it comes to theories for any crime. Investigators must keep an open mind because there are so many possible scenarios, he said.

"We need to know more about the victim. Was she a prostitute or a housewife? Did some guy get angry at his wife?" McCrary said.

He said identity is key because it can lead to where she was from and who she associated with.

It's hard to say if he knew the victim until she is identified, McCrary said.

It is chilling to think this may not be the killer's first victim, but it probably isn't, McCrary said.

"I'd be surprised if it was the first time he killed. It takes time to get comfortable around a body. This is not an entry-level sort of crime," McCrary said.

If it is his first, McCrary said, the killer is deeply disturbed.

"People tend to think it must be some crazy guy, some wild-eyed monster that drools," McCrary said. He also said sometimes it is someone who seems like a nice guy.

The fact that the victim's body was treated like trash, bagged and thrown on the road, may or may not be significant.

"You don't want to over interpret it too much," McCrary said. "To drive along and drop off body parts, at the very least, he didn't care. Perhaps he considers the victim to be nothing but trash and he wanted to show the world what a piece of trash this person was."

McCrary said the suspect may have felt wronged by the victim.

"Sometimes we see caring for the victim," he said, noting a suspect will place a pillow under the head and cover the body with a blanket. "It's called undoing. They feel remorse, they feel bad. In this case, that is totally absent. I'd be surprised if he were guilt-ridden about this. It takes some effort to dismember a body."

McCrory said investigators will likely look for where the dismemberment occurred.

"It will be some place under his control," McCrory said. "It is going to be quite a mess, and rich in evidence."

I find it interesting that there were so many bags, rather than the person trying to fit most of the parts into one or 2 bags. It's almost as if he changed his/her mind about dumping the body in one spot or several further away. I'm also wondering if this is a type of warning that the criminal is planning to strike again? It is very disturbing.

I KNEW THEY'D CALL IN A PROFILER. You might be right Cali...they might be trying to warn us all. My hope is that they make a bust of the woman and put it on AMW for this upcoming episode that might help. By this time I don't think they are going to find anymore body parts with all the animals here in the woods-especially the deer. This is starting to get scarier, and I think the profiler is right...the murder is watching it all and enjoying every bit of it. I have always been against having a gun, but its time for us all to get guns. I'm also making sure my kids go no where walking until this is solved. My city instinct is starting to kick in. God forbid he is among us. We all need to start praying!

Molly, deer are not carnivores, exceptions are some in Scotland that have taken to eating legs of small birds to increase their calcium levels or some other diet deficiency. This killer is probably a cowardly wimp with a limp little member that killed a woman and want some fame or infamy. Sick and twisted.

Hey Moll, you said this:

I am just curious about the deer comment. What would deer have to do with body parts being dragged and possibly eaten? We have raccoons, skunks, domestic dogs and cats, bobcats and any number of other animals roaming at will that would be apt to claw open a bag and dig in, but the deer sure would not give a hoot about it. They are vegans.

I am not trying to be smart. I was just wondering if you had a point that I am missing. I woke up late and am still on my first cup of coffee, so I am a bit groggy yet.

He also had an overbearing mother, alcoholic or absent father. He has a job that requires little to no contact with people. People probably don't notice him, though he can be polite and pleasant when the need arises...

Have I missed anything?

I was channel surfing last night and came across a documentary on MS-13. The pix they showed reminded me big-time of this case. The point about this probably not beng a first-time crime is that for most people, desensitizing themselves about what normal people consider abhorrant is necessary; that's why even most serial killers begin by torturing small animals and work their way up to increasingly violent crimes.

TO break that pattern would be a sign of a sicko that would proly make even other sickos sick.

There was a case in the 70s and 80s in the west. The guy killed three women and when someone discovered the first, in pieces, in an abandoned house, he decided to have fun with it I guess. Sick. He dismembered two more and left their parts all over town. They never found them all. They didn't find any of the genital areas. I am getting chills. When the police found the body parts, the guy went back and left more in the same place! Just to mess with them. If he was 20 in 76, he could still be able to do this. How creepy. He had a specific way of cutting, so it would be obvious if it was the same MO. If his last kill was in 86ish and he went away for a different murder, he would be getting out about now. But, it is probably just some hick mad at his wife and wanting to life insurance, so the body needed to be found. The sick thing is people cut up people quite frequently, which is why this isn't hitting big time news to a large degree. It is only news now if there are multiples. What does that say about our society. Most people though, try to bury or hide the body if it is someone they know. That is what scares me about this. You know people will suspect you first if your wife shows up cut up on the side of the road. AND you have to have some fearlessness to do this on a highway. It is obviously not a local woman that has other family or friends, besides the killer, or else we would know she was missing by now. It could be someone from out of town or just someone no one cared about, someone on the fringe of society, picked up at the truck stop, killed somewhere, and eventually dropped off here. It would be interesting to find out if she was pregnant. Someone has an affair or just knocks up a girlfriend - number one reason women are murdered. Maybe the body was cut up so they couldn't find the evidence of a baby with DNA. Soooooooo many reasons for this, we won't know till all the facts are in.

I'm guessing when you kill someone, chop up the body, and dump it along a highway, saving a few cents by using fewer bags probably isn't going through the persons mind. Plus, it would be easier to throw a bunch of small packages rather than one or two large ones.

true that. i hate retarded killers. you can't really figure their azzes out. well....has anyone thought that maybe he had another victim in the car or truck or whatever and he didn't know that victim was in the back throwing out bags. then he realized, went and collected some, then had to turn around, that explains why the one bag found on the other side, and then it was just too many cars to pick up the rest of the bags. cause they said it is more parts of the body missing. so where is the rest. or is this far out and i watch too much CSI?

shemeka, yes too much CSI! I highly doubt a second victim is throwing human body parts out a guy's car and he doesn't know it for a while, then picks some of it up, but leaves the head. They may never tell us details about all the ways the body was cut etc. That way they can verify when they find someone of interest. Only the cops and killer would know. Plus, if another body is found and they have released all the details, no way to know if it is a copycat. Now I have been watching too much CSI! They do that occasionally and while I understand it, it always annoys me! I am curious by nature. Dental records are only good if you have a comparison. If you have an idea who it is. I am sure they are comparing records, if there are teeth, to the missing persons that possibly match her description. But you cannot exactly go around checking the dental records of every person who may or may not be missing in the country. I know you didn't say that Shemeka, someone else asked if they were identifying her by dental records.

What does it matter? You don't need teeth to ID a body anymore. DNA works just fine.

Lets just all agree that this isnt CSI. It is going to take them more then 45 minutes (previously stated) to find out who the woman is, where shes from, what tool chopped her up, and what seemingly normal guy/girl did this to her. Lets sit back, lock our doors and wait. Thats all we can do is wait, it isnt going to help anyone by sitting here as a bunch of amateurs trying to figure out what happend. If were going to do that, we should go buy the CSI game for play station, very good game, keeps you occupied.

They can use dental records to ID a person, but there is no data base containing dental records of everyone they can "mass scan". Dental records are useful to confirm identity, not to figure out the ID of someone when you have no idea of who they are.

call - I know how it all works, I was dumbing it down for the forum. I was saying, no one ever requested dental records, xray or otherwise, for a national database and the fact the no one ever requested theirs might ring a bell that there is no database. I know what gives a name and what doesn't, but you really need to simplify things sometimes for people.

pacharlie. I am not picking on you. I corrected three people. And grammar doesn't show whether a person is intelligent or not, it is a learned skill. So, the more people correct others and practice, the better it will get. It is something I stunk at as a kid, we never studied grammar until I was in 7th grade, so it frustrates me when others are screwing it up too! I know I was grateful when someone finally started to teach me all the differences and without reminders, I would have forgotten by now. My brother has a learning disability, but that kid is WAY smarter than I am. It is a pet peeve. Kids nowadays, just look at some of the obituary posts for that COCO girl have no idea how to spell anything and no one seems to care. Even though it doesn't mean you're dumb, it makes us look it to the rest of the world. Sorry if I offended. I am not one to usually care if I offend people, but I am sorry.

Windgap, It's ok.

It is just something I have struggled with for my whole life and I just can not get it I can not memorize certain times tables as well, and often confuse left and right. I am also smart like your brother, just not in those areas, you make up for what you lack, I won't take offence to your corrections, maybe it will help :) Spell check does not correct it all.

No offense, but repeatedly correcting posters grammar is kind of a message board "faux pas" that doesn't generally win you many friends. That applies here as well as other message boards.

Just a little advice;-)

I have certain things that no matter how many times I do them, I cannot remember how to do it the next time. We all have memory impairments. I hope. Hope it isn't just me! I did have a head trauma! I could never memorize them either and then one day it clicked. Than compares, then refers to time. I remember that now because there is no a in time. So than cannot be related to the time. I went downstairs then got a bite to eat. Time relationship. Just how I remember it. This clown is scarier than that one. Has nothing to do with time, so it is the one with the "a". Just a tip. Maybe that will help.

There is discussing and just nitpicking what people say even though you know exactly what they mean. I know, I have done both.

I look at it this way windgap- forums function more like normal oral conversation than say, a book or college paper. Would you correct someone because they had a speech impediment or spoke with an accent when speaking to you? Don't sweat the small stuff. Responses here are often hurried and we are all human. If you understand the intent of the poster, that's all that's needed.

pacharlie, well....don't feel bad. looks like I'm the only one that thought there was some kind of mass dental record database to identify bodies. i always hear the news reports say he/she was identified by dental records, so i figured the dental records work like fingerprints. since we ALL have been to the dentist at one point in our lives, that it's all in the computer. lololol i'm still baffled about that. and i still believe there is such a database. i'm so confused. lololol

Alright Shemeka this may help you. Say there are 10 woman 50-60 years of age in missing persons that match our vic. Authorities will find out those missing persons dentists, and compare the teeth they have from the vic, to those of the 10 missing persons. Do you get it now?

Dreher ave was some idiot's rumor they started here earlier. They said a head was found. My husband is the delivery driver for that area and drives up and down it, and no head, talk of a head, or yellow tape where a head may have been!

If you have time, and with my injury, I have nothing but, just google "dismembered body". If it is the spouse, they are found either in a fridge and the person fled, or the body is found buried, dropped in woods, or in a lake/river. Serial killers leave bodies to be found. Unless you are a Japanese kid, then you just bring your mom's head to show and tell!

That would be interesting to know. About the median. I know something was found in the median, but I thought most of it was on the shoulder. I say it and I feel so bad. Her. Most of her was on the shoulder. That doesn't make me feel any better! I know about a month ago I saw black bags, same thing, most on the one shoulder, one in the median, a few on the other shoulder. But, don't we see that all the time, trash pick up? I thought something was funny about it, but my husband made fun of me. I was raised to be paranoid! My parents raised me to think I was small and easily kidnapped! That thought has never left and has helped out in a few situations!

Most of the time the dental records are requested by the examiner after they have an idea of who that person may have been.

Look at the case of Adam Walsh. They found him, then asked John and his wife down with the dental records.

I don't believe it can done before some sort of Id is made. That would be a lot of work for the examiner to go through. It could take weeks to gather all the information.

As stated before if you haven't committed a crime or arrested your not in any database. It's not like big brother is watching. Unless they've started microchipping us and someone failed to let us all know..

Unless there is a reason for your fingerprinting, I don't think they are kept on record. Not everyone has been fingerprinted.

That's why on the crime shows most of the time they come up with "nothing" or a "Hit" in the systems.

This guy/person/THING is scary.. Most killer are pretty neat with the disposals of the bodies. This guy couldn't care less, just the mere fact that the body was dismembered means this is a sick sick crime.

I think they better expand the search near the DWG or NJ side of the Gap too.

and Sheemka....YOU are out of hand today...!! Imbo!!

They are crime shows. lol. If you were printed as a child, no your prints arent on file, those prints are for your parents use. . . Say your missing, they find a kid that is similar to you, they have something to compare. However; government workers, teachers, law enforcement etc.; their prints are all on file somewhere. Maybe not in AFIS persay but they are on file somewhere and can be found.

Google Oklahoma dismembered cold case. Spooky. Killed three women, dismembered, and played games with cops. I would be curious, but at the same time not want to know, if this woman was cut up like those. Ugh. Gives me chills.

I wasn't mocking you at all. I don't think anyone was. I have the utmost respect for anyone that chooses that.
My son for the longest time wanted to become a cop. Still is thinking about it. I wouldn't be more proud of him. (Already am but you know what I meant)
As I stated in another post. My heart is with ANYONE that is out there searching the crime area. It's not an easy task. I can not say Thank you enough!!

Crim...As PaCharlie said we all tend to kid each other once and awhile..you know over email and postings everyone becomes 10 ft tall and bulletproof~!!

Congrats on your baby coming!! How exciting!!

Please do not stop your life because you are having children. Take it from someone who knows, I did it. It's VERY hard to go back when the kids are growing. My son kids me that he will finish college before me. He's 18 and headed there in Sept. (we think unless the National Guard has other plans for him...)

While it may be hard now it has to be a priority! Your future will be brighter if you do it now!! You can always look back and said I should have, could have. OR you can I say I did it!!

Ok..I will come off my mommy box now!! lol

YOUR too (Am I using the right 2) funny, are you ok now, other then the OCD thing with words..LOL right too. wrong your!!! hahaha. sorry. you asked!

too means excess or in addition. if you are adding anything to the sentence. like, i am too fat for these jeans. Talking about excess. Or I brought him along too. I am adding him to the group. That is how I remember it. It has an extra o because it refers to you having more of something in a way. Two o's if you are talking about excess or you mean "as well". I am bringing this too. I am bringing this as well.

Whereas one o just means you are moving something. I am going to the store (moving yourself to the store). I am giving the car to my kid. You aren't adding anything, just transferring, so one o. It gets complicated with the infinitives! I have to do something - I need to - I want to -- those are always one o.

your is possessive. It belongs to you. you're is what you meant. when you are saying, you are too funny. You just shorten it to your. So if you said i hate your car. try putting in. i hate you are car. doesn't work, so your is correct.

I will order that paxil asap! I was good at psychology even though I think much of it is ####! The idea of a baby being born freaks me out! I think it is gross and nasty and I never want to discuss it again. Haha. I guess I have my little quirks. I am also terrified of clowns and freaked out by little pieces of paper!

You could always request a c-section :)

Ok here is info on the murder, she was found beat to death, it said nothing about being chopped up, that was probally rumorMother of 2 killed in Jefferson home
Woman, ex-spouse in custody dispute

BY PEGGY WRIGHT AND MATT MANOCHIO
DAILY RECORD
Friday, February 1, 2008

A 49-year-old divorced mother of two was beaten to death in her Jefferson apartment, and police on Thursday were asking for the public's help in solving the homicide.

The victim, Elizabeth O'Brien, died of blunt force trauma, according to the Morris County Prosecutor's Office.

Township police responded at 5:27 p.m. Wednesday to a home at 120 Nolan's Point Road in the Lake Hopatcong section and found O'Brien dead inside the apartment she shared with her sons, 14 and 17. The apartment is in a two-story, white home across from the lake and from the Jefferson House restaurant.

O'Brien was due in family court in Morris County today for a hearing on her request to get sole custody of her sons and for increased child support from her ex-husband, Edward J. Petersen of Lyndhurst.

Prosecutor mum

The prosecutor's office released few details of the homicide on Thursday but asked that anyone with information or who may have observed suspicious activity around the victim's home to contact the township's or prosecutor's officers.

Neighbors said the victim lived there with her sons for between 12 and 18 months.

"There never seemed to be any problems over there -- nothing that would be noticed by any of the neighbors," said Cheryl Crinnian, a 38-year-old lifetime resident of Jefferson and neighbor to O'Brien.

Meanwhile, other neighbors said they didn't know the victim, other than to say hello to her when getting the mail. They'd regularly see the boys tossing a football in the yard or taking the bus to school, they said.

While the police presence on Thursday wasn't as noticeable as it was on Wednesday night, Jefferson officers were stationed in front of the taped-off house while members of the sheriff's and prosecutor's offices interviewed neighbors.

Used maiden name

Edward Petersen could not be reached on Thursday. His attorney, Mark Carter, did not return four calls for comment.

The victim had planned to represent herself in court today for the hearing before Superior Court family division Judge Rosemary Ramsay.

Carter notified the court of O'Brien's death on Thursday. The victim resumed using her maiden name -- O'Brien -- when her divorce occurred in 1998, but she is referred to in court papers by her married name of Elizabeth Petersen.

O'Brien, in her court papers, contended that she has been struggling financially to raise her sons, and that her ex-spouse has not helped to pay numerous medical and sports-related expenses incurred by their children. She said in her papers that her ex-husband has turned down her requests to be more actively involved in the children's lives and that he saw them only five times in 2007.

Petersen opposed O'Brien's request for more child support, saying in court papers that she failed to financially document why more support is necessary. The couple's divorce agreement called for joint custody, with the mother retaining physical custody. Petersen wrote that joint custody should continue because there has never been an allegation that he poses any risk of harm to the children.

Police response

The relative calm of Thursday's scene was a far cry from Wednesday.

Crinnian said the first police vehicle at the apartment was an unmarked car, which arrived

I grew up in Hopatcong! I wouldn't see how it would be related. Like I have said a million times. Loved ones try to hide the body, serial killers or random killers drop them in public places. If this body was found in the Delaware instead of the highway, I would have said boyfriend/spouse. Not only does childbirth freak me out, the raising them doesn't really appeal to me either! I have puppies, I am happy!

My husband grew up in Jefferson and we moved here from Denville almost three years ago. Believe me we didn't have stuff like what's happening around here lately happen over there. My ex fought me on Child support too but he didn't beat me to death... I feel badly for the two boys that are left motherless now. I am sure that this is ROCKING that neighbourhood.

As I said in a way earlier post I think this killer is almost mocking the police out this way. Taunting them and then sitting there laughing as they are on a wild goose chase. He's one sick Son of a you know what!!

There are many different types of killers and I believe we will probably find that this is a serial killer. In this case, because the body was left in a place that is clearly out in the open, the body was supposed to be found. We are probably going to find out when/if this person is caught, that this is not the first time that this person has killed. Most likely this person has been disturbed since childhood, and has not been given the nurturance and care that they needed when they were in their most important development years and in early adolescence. Although in this case, the killer is placing the body in a common place to be found, not all serial killers place bodies in this way, however it all depends on the type of serial killer this may be. There are organized and disorganized killers, this seems to be an organized killer, with how planned out the murder was.

It all remains to be seen... hopefully they find him soon.... before he strikes again, because someone capable to commit such a hideous crime will do it again, it's just a matter of time.

 It was just hard for my older two. They had gone to school there for 7 years it was tough leaving for them. On the other hand I think my son has more good friends here than he ever had over there! He didn't want to admit it but he knows it!

I am trying to keep up and read most of the posts and I am new to this. I have a slow dial up connection as well so I am not on as much as I would like to be. It creeps me out to think that the person that did this horrible crime could actually be reading what everyone is saying. That kind of makes me afraid to even post. Can people find out who you are on here? A couple of weeks ago I went on Craigslist and made a comment to someone that said something really disgusting and then I got two hangups on my answering machine. I *69 the last call and it gave me a number. I reversed the number on lookup and it said the person was from Bushkill and that is where the person I replied to on Craigslist was from. Does anyone have any info about this? Can someone on Craigslist figure out who you are? hmm.. Thanks for any info.

I don't know much about hacking, but I guess they can find out your IP address. I'd suppose there is an outside shot someone who is VERY computer savvy could maybe physically find you. It is definitely not something to worry about. Post away! We all do:-)

I'd say your previous situation was just a coincidence. No need to worry.

Yes I think that they have a lot of people working on this case, and when they find her identity hopefully it will open many doors for them. The body was frozen before it was cut up so it may have happened many weeks ago. I think if someone was missing in this proximity she would have been noticed, right?

I agree with you that there is a point that this suspect is trying to make. There is word that the body was frozen, whether is was due to the temps out side or prior freezing. Maybe this person waited till a certain time to discard of victom. If you ever watch cases on tv a lot of vics left to be found on roads r vics that have been missing a while. I gree with profiler. I also believe this suspect will not discard of weapon used. I think there will be clues left again but else where. If the susp is reading these he knows that there focus is on identifying vic not as much as searching for the simple clues in the oddest places. What about those rest areas. Im sure the forensic team has people comparing the garb bags for manufacturer and poss places where they were sold. I will be following this case.

Like another person wrote, there could be two people -- one to drive and one to discard. Maybe they/ one person pulled over? Alot depends on what side of the road the bags were found. there is also a poss of it being two different bodies. Somethings I heard outside of the paper makes me think that is a good poss.

It isnt so much that the authorities dont care as much about finding the evidence as they do finding out who the vic is. They are both vital parts of the investigation. The media and this forum (Im guilty of it) are what is making it seem like finding out her identity is what everyone is more focused on.

Sick as this may sound, maybe he is keeping parts as souvenirs. It has happened before. I feel the same way about watching too much CSI. Also if you look where that last bag was dropped off, That may have pulled off road to make sure all was out of car and noticed they forgot one. That area is a great place to turn back around. Poss for so many bags is to make it a lil less noticable or like profilr said to make a point of hatred toward vic. Aother poss is a very small car w/ lil trunk space.

No one said anything about watching too much of it. Shoot I watch it religiously, along with every other crime show, reality or not. But, there does come a time when some people should lay of the tube because they think that what goes on, on CSI is exactly how it works here in the real world.

"killer is probably enjoying the infamy"? Well maybe that person/s should think about how the gap in drop off sights make things look. Maybe the person/ s screwed up. This could show signs of weak ness or disorganization. If they are this disorganized with the drop off, how about the initial crime. I bet there is atleast two locations crawling with evidence! Just a matter of finding it.

I don't necessarily think they were disorganized. I think the dropoff spacing was due to passing vehicles. 80/380 in that stretch is a virtual ghost town in the wee hours of the morning. It would appear to me that perhaps they were dropping bags at points that there were no vehicles coming either way. It would be my opinion that they were not alone in doing so either - it would seem to me that perhaps one person was driving, while at least one other was tossing bags so they did not need to fully stop in case a vehicle came up behind them or the other way.

The reason that person took notice to something like this is because a few yrs bk that person saw a lrg bag off to the side on rt. 314 near Pocono Manor and made a comment about you never know what could be in a bag like that- maybe even a body. The nxt day it was reported that the bag did indeed hold the remains of a human being. EEry to me.

I can only ask that people be very careful what they print on here. I will air on the side of caution and believe that this person IS reading these forums and I will not be apart of this persons feed by getting involved with my opinions, guesses etc.

I am here to ask those to be very careful what you put on these threads or better yet, Please don't reply at all!!!!

It makes no sense to give this very disturbed person any more feed.

Thank you.

I can understand why you would agree with AuntieEm. I didn't really mean to sound like I was not agreeing with her. It may not be a serial killer, we don't know. It could be someone that just panicked. Most criminals are not very intelligent. The person that did this crime may not even live in this area. Let's hope. I understand that we do not know either way so it is probably better to be safe, be cautious, and keep our eyes open.

The killer could just as easily have committed the crime in a very far away place, driven across many states, disposed of the body in the general locale (keeping moving so as to remain unnoticed.....someone could id a stopped car) and turned around and driven back where they came from. For MY sake I hope he's far away, but I pray for the women around him, where ever he is.....let's face it, 99.9 percent this is some bizarre predatory male, unless its some cult sacrifice thing. Anyway, God rest her soul, and may her journey wherever she is now be more peaceful than the one she experienced in life.

I was just pointing out the fact that there ARE (and I am not one of them), people on this forum who think that the crime can be solved in 45 minutes, oh and ofcourse that everyones DNA,FINGERPRINTS AND DENTAL RECORDS are in one giant data base, so sir, before you point fingers at who you think may be an idiot maybe, perhaps, you should read the ENTIRE forum and get the whole story.

As to the idea that criminals not being intelligent, that's not necessarily true. Many times a killer that is this organized and so disturbed as to cut up a body and place it in seperate trash bags and dump them along the road and not be noticed, turns out to have an average to sometimes even an above average IQ and certainly not be percieved as being a killer. They can completely slip under the radar as a normal person rather than being a homicidal maniac.

Investigators are not saying much about evidence gathered Thursday along two Northeastern Pennsylvania highways where a woman's dismembered body was discovered in trash bags at eight sites Tuesday.

"We collected several items and are going through them," said Sgt. Gregg Mrochko of state police at Swiftwater. "We're not going into details and not getting into specifics."

Mrochko said no additional dumping sites were discovered Thursday, but officials also said they had not recovered all of the body.

A glove and a black bag were among an assortment of items plucked by troopers as part of Thursday's search along Interstates 380 and 80 in Lackawanna and Monroe counties.

Cadaver-sniffing dogs, volunteer firefighters, detectives and a state police helicopter were among the resources deployed as more than 50 people set out on the expansive search, which covered about 15 miles and included areas beyond the highways.

"We covered a large area," Mrochko said. "I feel a little more confident (with what we've gathered.)"

At about noon, the glove was discovered along the Tobyhanna exit ramp. It was photographed and placed in a yellow evidence envelope.

On Wednesday, the Monroe County coroner, along with a forensic pathologist, released details about the body, which they described as being that of a heavyset woman with dark-colored hair with gray strands who stood 5-feet 7-inches tall.

The coroner ruled cause of death as homicide by multiple violent injuries.

A composite sketch is being prepared and would be released in the near future, state police said Thursday.

However, the woman's identity and that of her killer remain unknown.

Police ask anyone with information to call state police at Swiftwater at 839-7701.

Police scour Poconos for clues in death; Search on ground, from the air along highways where woman's body parts were discovered.

Dozens of police officers spent most of Thursday searching the corridor of Interstates 80 and 380 in the Poconos, looking for clues in the mystery of a woman whose body parts turned up along the highways earlier in the week.

By Thursday afternoon, the searchers had collected "items recovered from various locations" which will be "evaluated for their evidentiary value," according to a news release from state police at Swiftwater. Police did not go into more detail about what the items were. They will also release a composite sketch of the woman in the near future.

State highway workers preparing for an ice storm first found some body parts in a trash bag along Interstate 380 Tuesday morning. Over the next few hours, police found a woman's severed head along the highway, as well as bags of body parts at six dump sites in Monroe and Lackawanna counties.

An autopsy on Wednesday found the woman suffered "multiple violent injuries," any one of which could have killed her. Police said the woman was white with dark hair going gray, heavy-set, standing 5 feet 7 inches tall.

This is the second similar case in Monroe County in the last six years. In 2002, the body of Robert Roudbush, 46, of Plymouth Township, Luzerne County, was found in a burn barrel in Jackson Township. According to police, he had been beaten and stabbed to death, and his hands, legs, and head were cut off.

On Thursday, police looked for evidence on the ground and from the air. According to police, various agencies assisted in the search, including K-9 units from the Dauphin County Sheriff's Department and the New York State Police and detectives from Scranton, along with local fire companies.

Anyone with information on this case is asked to call police at 570-839-7701.

Police will resume searching the Poconos for clues of a missing woman's body parts this weekend and may release a sketch Sunday.

State Police Trooper Robert Sebastinelli from the Swiftwater barracks said no search was conducted Friday because of inclement weather.

Various agencies are assisting in the search, including New York State police.

The parts were discovered in a plastic bag on Interstate 380 Tuesday by state highway workers, which prompted a wider police search that led to them finding body parts in seven other locations along I-380 and Interstate 80.

Dozens of police officers spent Thursday looking for additional clues around I-80 and I-380.

An autopsy on Wednesday found that the woman suffered "multiple violent injuries" any of which could have killed her.

Anyone with information is asked to call police at 570-839-7701.

Poconos body parts case is no 'CSI' episode; Experts say it will take more than lab work to identify victim found in bags, killer.

When body parts were found in plastic bags in New Jersey's Ocean and Burlington counties in the early 1990s, investigators zeroed in on a small but significant piece that yielded all the information they would need to identify one of the two victims: a fingertip.

On that they found a fingerprint, which turned up a criminal record. And the name of the victim.

A wallet with a driver's license in it identified the other victim.

Investigators in Monroe and Lackawanna counties have more of a mystery on their hands. A female head, a partial torso and other body parts were found in trash bags scattered along highways last week.

So far, authorities have disclosed little about the clues the killer might have left behind to help them figure out who the victim is, how she died and who killed her.

While dismembered remains are a tough place for a homicide investigation to start, forensic experts say the crime is not impossible to solve when they work with police and behavioral experts.

"Dismemberment is not common, but it's not uncommon," said Dr. Louis Schlesinger, a professor of forensic psychology at John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York City.

In most cases, dismemberment is a way for a killer to get rid of a body and not a sign of a deeper psychological problem, he said. "It's as simple as all that."

"A greater challenge'

In the Poconos case, body parts were found in various locations along Interstates 80 and 380. The remains are those of a heavy-set white woman, about 5-foot-7, with dark hair containing some gray.

An autopsy found the woman suffered "multiple violent injuries," any of which could have killed her. The forensic pathologists who performed the autopsy at Lehigh Valley Hospital-Cedar Crest would not discuss how they do their work. But medical examiners who have worked on similar cases said they take the same approach in an autopsy to identify the victim, find a cause of death and clues to the killer, whether they are looking at body parts or a body that's intact.

"It's just a greater challenge if you don't have all the pieces," said Dr. John D. Howard, the chief medical examiner in Spokane, Wash., and vice president of the Atlanta-based National Association of Medical Examiners.

Poconos body parts case is no 'CSI' episode; Experts say it will take more than lab work to identify victim found in bags, killer.

One challenge is that examiners must determine whether all the severed parts came from the same person. Sometimes, it's a matter of piecing together a tattoo, scar or the diameter of cut bones. The more conclusive test is laboratory matching of DNA from samples of blood, bone or muscle.

"Each part is considered a human remain," Howard said. "So you treat it with dignity but identify as much from that part as you can."

If the head is available -- as with the woman found locally -- a sketch of the face, dental X-rays and dentures engraved with a name or initials can sometimes help identify the victim, experts said.

Likewise, a hand can yield fingerprints for a match if the victim had ever been fingerprinted as a child or as a crime suspect.

The victim's height can be obtained from as little as a leg bone, Howard said. Anthropology studies of various populations over time have produced formulas for determining height from a single femur or tibia. Such studies also help medical examiners approximate age by looking at the fourth rib, collar bone and pelvis.

To determine the victim's cause of death, examiners search the skin for bruises, cuts other than those that severed the body parts, and any other signs of illness or injury. They also X-ray the parts for broken bones, anatomical anomalies and metal fragments that could come from a knife or bullet.

Finding clues about the killer more often involves police work or profiling by mental health experts. However, Dr. Stephen Pustilnik, chief medical examiner in Galveston, recalled one murder case in Alabama about 20 years ago in which the autopsy yielded key evidence. "The killer carved his initials into the victim," he said.

Katherine Ramsland, a DeSales University professor, author and authority on serial killers and forensic psychology, said police accounts of how the woman's body parts were discarded last week in the Poconos might say something about her killer.

"The person who dismembered her didn't just dump the parts but put them into something, as if to hide them, but then dumped them in a way they could be found," she said in an e-mail. "It's an odd behavior."

"If the bags were just for transport, that's one thing. But if for concealment, that's stranger and more interesting."

Since the victim in the Poconos case was female, Schlesinger of the John Jay College said there is a good chance her death was the result of a domestic dispute. In most murder cases, the victim knows their killer, he said.

A smaller number of cases have sexual or psychotic aspects, he added.

Schlesinger, an author and court witness not involved in the Poconos case, said dismemberment is often a spur-of-the-moment thing, although some efforts to get rid of victims become very sophisticated.

"Most of these are very spontaneous, unplanned," he said. "Very often the offender never did anything like this before in his entire life."

Similar cases

In a Texas case, a jury in 2003 acquitted Robert Durst of murder although Durst admitted dismembering neighbor Morris Black's body and tossing the parts into Galveston Bay in garbage bags. Durst testified that he panicked after Black died from an accidental gunshot to the head as the two struggled over a pistol in Durst's apartment on Sept. 28, 2001.

"Nothing from that body identified the killer," said Pustilnik, a deputy medical examiner at the time. "It was all forensic police work." Durst's fingerprints were found on the garbage bags that washed ashore.

Poconos body parts case is no 'CSI' episode; Experts say it will take more than lab work to identify victim found in bags, killer.

In the New Jersey case, former nurse Richard W. Rogers had made little effort to hide his victims' identities from investigators, according to Ocean County Chief Assistant Prosecutor William J. Heisler, who won a double conviction against Rogers in 2006.

The wallet and driver's license of one of the victims, 56-year-old Thomas Mulcahy of Sudbury, Mass., was in one of the bags holding some of his remains. The other victim, 44-year-old Anthony E. Merrero, a male prostitute from Manhattan, was identified because he had a prior criminal record, discovered when his fingerprints were entered into a law enforcement database. A tattoo also helped identify him.

Both men had been stabbed to death, Heisler said. Rogers, suspected but not charged in two other similar body parts cases, including one in Lancaster County, is serving two consecutive life terms for the New Jersey murders.

Heisler said advances in fingerprinting technology eventually allowed law enforcement to establish a case-to-case match, determining the same prints were on bags holding the remains of both victims. Then, in 2001, the prints showed as a match to a case in Maine, where Rogers had been acquitted of murdering his roommate in 1973.

The case was solved through "good old-fashioned police work," said Heisler.

Heisler said missing persons reports are always a good place to start in cases like the one involving the Pocono remains. DNA won't do any good unless family members can provide samples for comparison, he said. Dental record confirmations would require records from a victim's dentist. "You have to have some idea who you think it might be," he said.

"It's not CSI," Heisler said of the popular television series. "That stuff is fantasyland."

Body parts not the only disgusting thing on roadside

Volunteer trash pickers have found it all — bizarre, kinky, disgusting things — along Interstate 80 over the years.

All except body parts. But they're not shocked about that chilling discovery in the Poconos on Tuesday.

"(I'm) not surprised. Just happy that it wasn't us and that it hasn't happened before — or that we didn't know about it if it did," said Jackie Hakim, coordinator of the Monroe County Litter Control and Beautification Program.

Eight bags of body parts, including a head and torso, were found along Interstates 80 and 380 on Tuesday. Police searched for more remains and evidence Thursday with little success. An autopsy showed the victim was a woman, and investigators are still trying to identify her.

As diehard trash-busters, Hakim and Judy Cherepko glove their hands and steel their stomachs to clear the highway median between Stroudsburg and Tannersville a few times a year.

They typically fill 15 to 20 garbage bags in about two hours.

There's the usual junk: fast food wrappers, broken glass, auto parts left after wrecks and breakdowns.

"That really burns my butt because (the car owner) is responsible for the cleanup of the site or their insurance company is supposed to pay to have somebody clean it up," Hakim said.

Insulation and building supplies also are a common find. Hakim suspects some of the stuff blows off trucks as they fly down the highway.

Then there was money — coins scattered down an embankment, about $20 in quarters and dimes.

Other memorable items boggle the imagination — like men's and women's undergarments.

"Various pieces of clothing that I find difficult to imagine how it ended up along the highway," Hakim said.

In a similar vein, sex toys, liquor bottles and "strange" magazines, she recalled.

"The closer you get to the (Bartonsville) truck stop, the kinkier the stuff gets," she said.

Hakim has also removed gallon jugs of urine dumped by truckers. She remembers one in particular.

"I wanted to leave the guy a note. He needed to see a doctor," she said.

Hakim has helped remove roadside litter in the Poconos for about 16 years.

"The one thing we were always afraid of was that we were going to stumble on body parts. I'm really amazed that never happened in all these years," she said.

I-80/380 TRAFFIC

One challenge facing investigators in the highway body parts case is the sheer volume of traffic that speeds across Interstates 80 and 380 through the Poconos every day.

The person who dumped human remains was one among thousands who travels these roads. But that also means thousands of other drivers might have seen suspicious activity that can help police find the culprit.

Sensors placed along the highways count vehicles. The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation uses those traffic counts to estimate ADT (Average Daily Traffic).

Usually you see most garbage bags or furniture that people dump down secluded roads like at the end of rt 196 in Tobyhanna which sometimes sits there for months before it is picked up. This I do not understand considering we have a bulk site to go to here in Tobyhanna for such things like furniture but the bottom line is PEOPLE DON'T CARE UNTIL THEY ARE CAUGHT. If you see it happenening, get the license plate and report them, that is the only way they will get caught.

I think it is pretty comical that the article says the closer you get to Bartonsville truck stop the kinkier the items found are... Could that have something to do with the adult book store there?? Hmm let me think... Uhhh Yeahh. People are just nasty and are too lazy to do the right thing. What ever happened to the litter bug commercials. There used to be an old American Indian commercial that used to hit home with people. What ever happened to that??

C'mon Tucker...don't pick on the truckers with a broad brush. As the old saying goes, "a few bad apples sour the bunch". The trash on the Pocono secondary roads is pretty bad. I don't see many truckers on these roads...

Good question WestEndGal-

Is there something such as a "litter hotline"? I would love to be able to report these dirtbags if I see one in action. Does anyone know of one?

Remember when someone dug through the trash bags on Jonas road and made a sign with the name and address of the dumper(that they found in the trash)? It was on brctv13. Don't know if the pig that dumped it got charged.

as to your comment on the truckstop in nj and the trucker tea as you call it there is not difference between that and all the people in cars you see pull off on the shoulder of the road and just whip it out and
####.....at least the truckers bottle it so it can be thrown away
or would you rather walk in it and track it in your vehicle???

you must drive a truck then to know what the truck side of the parking lot looks like dont act like you never did that or just whipped it out and #### someplace other then a restroom.....

rather not see it in a jug on the roadside.

Have you done this? Do you just get a license plate # and report it to the troopers? Or do you actually confront people? I am concerned about retaliation, like someone throwing rocks at my house windows or poisoning my dogs. One person actually throws empty Alpo cans right in front of my house, like they're feeding their dog in their vehicle on the way to work.

Nice, huh?

However, if you see someone dumping garbage bags and can get a plate or other ID and want to report it, you'd have to call Monroe County Vector and Litter (the folks in the article). One thing they'll tell you is to NOT open the bags, they'll do that. If ID can be made, they will go forward with getting the person/people fined.

PS - Spring is coming and we're going to be out there cleaning things up.

It's not just drivers trashing the area. There is a quaint little church on the corner of Wigwam and Cranberry Roads with a nice new sign in front of it. Guess where the old sign went? It was thrown over the bank and can be seen clearly when driving down Wigwam Road. Maybe the reverend didn't do it but it's his responsibility to have it disposed of....properly! This has been there for months. I'm sure he or one of his church members could have removed it by now....or maybe they don't care either!

NEW YORK, NEW ENGLAND FANS SUIT UP FOR THE BIG GAME

shootout ...

By ADAM McNAUGHTON
Pocono Record Writer

It seems just about everywhere you look in Monroe County there are New York Giants fans.

In the Poconos, Giants fans are loud, proud and optimistic about their team's chances against the 18-0 New England Patriots in today's Super Bowl XLII in Glendale, Ariz.

"I'm actually happy everyone is not giving us a chance," said Analomink resident Hector Gonzalez, who drives around the county with a Giants helmet on top of his van.

"That feeling of being an underdog gets those guys in the locker room fired up and gives us an edge."

Gonzalez and other Giants fans in the area are going to need every edge they can get. The Patriots are 12-point favorites to beat the Giants and become the first team in NFL history to finish a season with a 19-0 record and the first undefeated team since the 1972 Miami Dolphins.

But that's not enough to dampen the spirits of Giants fans.

"It's going to be a shootout," said 26-year-old East Stroudsburg resident Mike Trainor. "It would be foolish to think we're going to limit the highest-scoring team in the league, but if they can score 30 to 35 points they're going to be right there."

Road hogs Body parts may be the most disgusting thing found along the interstate ... but not by much

By SUSAN KOOMAR

Record Senior Managing Editor

Volunteer trash pickers have found it all — bizarre, kinky, disgusting things — along Interstate 80 over the years.

All except body parts. But they're not shocked about that chilling discovery in the Poconos on Tuesday.

"(I'm) not surprised. Just happy that it wasn't us and that it hasn't happened before — or that we didn't know about it if it did," said Jackie Hakim, coordinator of the Monroe County Litter Control and Beautification Program.

Eight bags of body parts, including a head and torso, were found along interstates 80 and 380 on Tuesday. Police searched for more remains and evidence Thursday with little success. An autopsy showed the victim was a woman, and investigators are still trying to identify her.

As diehard trash-busters, Hakim and Judy Cherepko glove their hands and steel their stomachs to clear the highway median between Stroudsburg and Tannersville a few times a year.

Trash-buster Jackie Hakim has picked up gallon jugs of urine dumped by truckers. She remembers one in particular.

"I wanted to leave the guy a note. He needed to see a doctor."

They typically fill 15 to 20 garbage bags in about two hours.

There's the usual junk: fast food wrappers, broken glass, auto parts left after wrecks and breakdowns.

"That really burns my butt because (the car owner) is responsible for the cleanup of the site or their insurance company is supposed to pay to have somebody clean it up," Hakim said.

Insulation and building supplies also are a common find. Hakim suspects some of the stuff blows off trucks as they fly down the highway.

Then there was money — coins scattered down an embankment, about $20 in quarters and dimes.

Other memorable items boggle the imagination — like men's and women's undergarments.

"Various pieces of clothing that I find difficult to imagine how it ended up along the highway," Hakim said.

In a similar vein, sex toys, liquor bottles and "strange" magazines, she recalled.

"The closer you get to the (Bartonsville) truck stop, the kinkier the stuff gets," she said.

Hakim has also removed gallon jugs of urine dumped by truckers. She remembers one in particular.

"I wanted to leave the guy a note. He needed to see a doctor," she said.

Hakim has helped remove roadside litter in the Poconos for about 16 years.

"The one thing we were always afraid of was that we were going to stumble on body parts. I'm really amazed that never happened in all these years," she said.

$35 MILLION OFFICE COMPLEX

Developers want to construct a seven-story curved glass building they say could redefine Eighth Avenue in west Bethlehem and generate as much as $250,000 a year in property taxes. The building, inspired by designs for a Las Vegas resort, would be part of a $35 million office and commercial project across the street from the vacant Martin Tower, the Lehigh Valley's tallest building.

MOUNT AIRY CASINO OWNER CHARGED WITH PERJURY

Mount Airy Casino Resort owner Louis DeNaples was charged Wednesday with four counts of perjury for reportedly lying to gaming regulators about his relationship with reputed mobsters. The Pennsylvania Gaming Control Board temporarily suspended DeNaples' casino license, which bans DeNaples from selling or divesting his license or interest in the Paradise Township casino. What's next? The gaming board will vote Tuesday whether to continue the suspension until the charges against DeNaples are resolved.

ALLENTOWN TO HOST FIRST MAJOR BIKE RACE IN 18 YEARS

Allentown's first major professional bicycle race in 18 years will be contested on a hilly, winding 7.1-mile course that will start and finish at Ninth and Hamilton streets, officials announced Thursday. The Commerce Bank Triple Crown of Cycling, which also will have races in Reading and Philadelphia, is expected to draw more than 400,000 spectators and 400 professional cyclists from 23 countries.

What's next? The opening leg of the series gets under way June 3 in Allentown.

ARCHDIOCESE PLANS TO CLOSE 3 SCHOOLS, OPEN 2 OTHERS

Lansdale Catholic and two other Archdiocese of Philadelphia high schools will close in the next four years, sending their students to new, $65 million schools in Bucks and Montgomery counties, officials said Monday. Students from 59-year-old Lansdale Catholic High School would move to a new school in Hilltown Township in 2012 while students from Kennedy-Kenrick High School in Norristown and St. Pius X High School in Pottstown would move to a new school in Upper Providence Township at the end of 2009-10.

What's next? The archdiocese will begin borrowing money and raising funds to help pay for the new schools.

BUCKS TEACHER ACCUSED OF MAKING BOMB THREATS

A fourth-grade teacher at a Bucks County public school orchestrated a campaign of violent threats at her school in October 2007 because she was upset she wasn't assigned to teach fifth grade, authorities said Thursday. Susan Romanyszyn, 45, of Warminster is accused of scrawling threats on walls at Longstreth Elementary School in the township, spreading nails in a parking lot and planting a bottle filled with screws and powder in a fifth-grader's desk. She was charged with 17 counts of terroristic threats. What's next? Romanyszyn could face up to 10 years in prison on each count if she is found guilty.

BODY PARTS OF WOMAN SCATTERED ON HIGHWAYS

State troopers found the body parts of a woman, including her neatly severed head, in trash bags scattered along 15 miles of Interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties Tuesday. Who the dismembered woman was, and how and when she died, remain a mystery.

What's next? An anthropologist will examine the remains and troopers will review missing persons reports to see if they can identify her.

MAN FATALLY SHOT AS FBI SERVES CHILD PORN WARRANT

A 39-year-old Hilltown man was shot six times and killed in his Callowhill Road home Monday night as Federal Bureau of Investigations agents attempted to serve a search warrant for child pornography, authorities said. Bucks County Coroner Joseph Campbell said that one of Darius T. Hill's six wounds was self-inflicted, but he has not ruled on the manner of death: whether homicide, suicide, accident or undetermined.

What's next? Hill's family plans to hire an attorney and an independent medical examiner to conduct an autopsy.

1 DEAD, 3 WOUNDED

IN ALLENTOWN SHOOTINGS

Two separate shootings Thursday in Allentown left one man dead and three others wounded. William Spearman, 35, of 313 N. Seventh St. was killed about 12:40 a.m. in Trinkle's Cafe at 533 Turner St. About 15 hours later, police responded to a report of a young man who ran into a bodega for help after being shot -- and two more wounded men arrived in a car, officials said. The shooting took place about 4 p.m. near Plum and Early streets. None of the injuries were life-threatening.

What's next? Police are searching for suspects.

STUDY: BOROUGHES WOULD SAVE WITH REGIONAL POLICE

Summit Hill, Lansford and Coaldale would save money and better protect their citizens by forming a regional police department, a state study concluded. The study suggests a department with a minimum of 12 full-time and four part-time officers.

What's next? The boroughs will form a committee to study the draft report, then take their conclusions back to their municipalities. The borough councils would have the final say.

SWIFTWATER, Pa. (AP) -- A severed head and other dismembered remains found stuffed in trashed bags and scattered along Pocono Mountain highways have been identified as those of a missing woman, state police said Monday.

Deanna Maria Null, 36, was reported missing by her family after authorities circulated a description of the victim. She was identified using dental records.

No arrests have been made.

The remains were found scattered along Interstates 380 and 80 in northeastern Pennsylvania, state police said. The first bag was found Jan. 29 by a worker salting roads.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks. It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

Null lived in the Scranton and Williamsport areas but was "relatively transient," he said. The last time she was seen alive was in mid-January.

Police have identified a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were found in trash bags along two interstates in the Pocono Mountains.

Deanna Marie Null, 36, was killed and her remains dismembered, placed in trash bags and scattered along Interstates 380 and 80, state police said Monday. The first bag was found last Tuesday by a road worker salting I-380.

Null was last seen getting into an older-model sedan in Scranton two weeks ago, but police said they have no suspects and no arrest has been made.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing after authorities circulated a description of the victim. She was identified using dental records.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks. It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

Null lived in the Scranton and Williamsport areas but was "relatively transient," he said. The last time she was seen alive was in mid-January.

"There's a two-week gap we're trying to close," Bartal said.

A man who answered the phone at a listing for Null in Williamsport identified himself as Null's brother-in-law, but said the family did not want to comment.

The car that Null was seen getting into was described as an older-model (late 1970s or early 1980s), dark Buick or Cadillac sedan with a cloth or leather roof, chrome luggage rack and white license plate. Police described the driver as a black man, 5-feet-9 to 6 feet, with a short military-style haircut and a stocky build.

Court records indicate that Null pleaded guilty in Lycoming County to drug and conspiracy charges in 2003. Null violated her parole in 2005 and a warrant was issued for her arrest last September for failure to pay court costs and fines, records show.

Deanna Marie Null of Scranton and Williamsport has been identified as the woman whose dismembered remains were found in garbage bags along Interstates 80 and 380 last Tuesday.

February 04, 2008

SWIFTWATER — The murder victim whose body parts were found along Monroe County highways last week has been identified as Deanna Marie Null, 36, of the Scranton and Williamsport areas.

Null did not have a permanent home and lived at different addresses, State Police Lt. Robert Barta said Monday at the Swiftwater barracks. Null was not reported missing, but was last seen alive in mid-January, Barta said.

She was seen getting into an older-model, dark-colored Cadillac or Buick sedan with a cloth or leather top, a four- or five-strip chrome luggage rack on the trunk lid and a white license plate (registration unknown). Police said the driver was described as a black male, between 5 feet 9 and 6 feet tall, with a short, military-style haircut and stocky build.

"We're trying to find out where (Null) was between the time she was last seen and the time her remains were found (as well as the identity of the driver of the vehicle she was seen getting into)," Barta said. "We're trying to find anyone who saw or heard from her during that time period."

Null's remains, including her severed head, were found Jan. 29 in different trash bags scattered along Interstates 380 and 80, police said.

The first of the bags was found on Interstate 380 in Coolbaugh Township by a Pennsylvania Department of Transportation crew treating roads in preparation for freezing rain. The bag was in the median.

"The victim's family saw the news coverage on the body parts being found, saw the description of who the remains belonged to and contacted police Thursday evening," Barta said. "We made a positive identification on Friday, but chose not to release that information because of the direction in which we were taking the investigation."

Barta said police have questioned various people including Null's mother and boyfriend, whose identities have not been released, but have no suspects at this time.

When asked if all of Null's remains have been found, Barta said, "We're not commenting on that at this time."

When she was last seen, Null was unemployed, but had signed up with a temporary employment agency, Barta said.

Authorities aren't commenting on whether this is the same Deanna Null who pleaded guilty to drug possession and conspiracy charges in Lycoming County in 2003 and later violated her parole. The state Attorney General's Office handled that drug case.

Also, Williamsport police said they have no information verifying she was the target of an attempted drive-by shooting in that area in 2002.

Anyone with any information on this case is asked to contact police at (570) 839-7701 or (866) 403-2946.

Well we all know how that will be. I didn't know what I was doing , it was a fit of rage I didn't realize what I had done. The same shyt heard all the time. Then will come the evaluation, maybe insanity, then the sentence 25 years. Regardless they won't get what they deserve. I feel act like an animal live like one; throw him/her/them in the tiger cage. Better yet let's tie their arms, legs to horses and pull. Humm, that would still be to nice. My prayers go to the family of Ms. Null. May she rest in peace.

While Ms. Null may RIP we still living with the perp at large should not be at ease- As Sniper always says- be vigilant, be ready and practice often.

Either way it is hard to tell on here what context you are writing in. Sorry that I took it as if you were being witty. I don't think what you said was very nice either way. What does picking up litter have to do with anything? I got my facts from someone on the inside not the article and they did not say anything about Williamsport.

cali- a woman by that name and age entered a guilty plea in 2003 for drug charges in Lycoming county. I don't know the specifics of that arrest or even if this is the same person, but I have to wonder if drugs didn't have something to do with her murder, as well.

I just found her criminal docket online. Seems as though she got busted for 4 counts of possession with intent to deliver. She plead guilty to criminal conspiracy, did some jail time, then had a string of parole violations. Looks like she could of had a bit of a drug problem. It doesn't specify what drug (Monroe County always does).

"Well Editor, Do we have a reporter hot on the trail of this poor souls past, and history ... ?"

Yes, we do, and we believe this is not the first time she was the victim of a serious crime (in addition to the drug stuff, in which she was not the victim.)

We're trying to sort it out so it makes sense.

In terms of police action, remember that it often takes longer to build a solid, prosecutable case than it does to "figure it out." Remember how long some other outcomes took to reach the arrest stage?

Cali,

Criminal conspiracy with intent to sell?

I agree with you cali, either a drug induced maniac or someone thought she would sell out to avoid more jail time.

This what I consider residual drug crimes.

I'm sure if the Police ID'ed her they already know who their looking for.

I agree with Ed1. Even if you have suspects, gathering enough evidence to prosicute takes time and methodical effort.

I'm sorry that she had to die this way but, it's not a recommended lifestyle if you want to get old. Sounds like she either owed money or was going to give someone up in her upcoming drug case.

My opinion so far with this case is that we may be dealing with more then just someone who was worried she would snitch on them or a boyfriend. I could be wrong but from what i have seen so far is that this woman is what a killer would think of as a disposable person...generally a homeless person, a prostitute, a drug addict. The killer wanted the body to be found quickly, he was not hiding his victim, he wanted her to be seen and to cause great fear to the public. I think we are in trouble out here in the poconos, there is someone very dangerous among us.

Also, Williamsport police said they have no information verifying she was the target of an attempted drive-by shooting in that area in 2002."

But then murder is always wrong.

Troopers also released the description of a car they are looking for in connection with the murder. They said it is an older model, dark colored Cadillac or Buick sedan with a cloth or leather top, a four or five chrome strip luggage rack on the truck lid bearing a white license plate from an unknown state. The car was last seen at Olive and Capouse Streets in Scranton about two weeks ago. It was driven by a tall, stocky black man with short, military-style haircut.

Anyone with information is asked to call state police at Swiftwater can be reached at 570-839-7701.

1234, I was kind of thinking that in the picture, she didn't look too happy, maybe a 'mugg shot'. I didn't want to say anything, but now that you found that out, the picture makes sense. Nonetheless, still a waste of human life and I hope they catch the person that did this unspeakable thing to another human being. Drugs or no drugs, there's no excuse for that.

This is really very sad...I am originally from the Pocono area and to see this on the Pocono Record website was very disturbing. This is not about past drug charges or being (basically) homeless...it's about a LIFE and a tragic, horrible, senseless death. Remember, this could be your loved one...when you post a comment think of how you'd feel before you give your opinion and whether you'd want to hear that in connection to your own family member! I hope they catch the killer...anyone who could dimemeber a body is outright heartless and has no human feelings...and he's still lurking in your neighborhood...be sympathetic for this girl...someone, somewhere must have loved her...

I'll be the first to say it....white license Plate-JERSEY. Im from Jersey....lots of white License plates. Delaware is blue, Pensy is yellow/blue.....so where else would you see a white plate? Im starting to think alot of us were right...she was killed here, dumped here, and then he went home. I hate that thought. I hate it that she was killed. My condolences to her family...this is a horrible way to die. This is definately a death penatly case if ever there was one., and Im not a fan of the death penalty, but any human being who could sit down and carve another one up needs to die. That's not human behavior.

On my way to Jersey tonight I spotted a garbage bag right after exit 310 before the tolls, but on the East sie. I reported it, and the trooper was very eager to find it. That tells me they don't have all this woman's parts.

The bag was a green/black garbage bag with something red ontop of it, sitting in plain view on the side of the road. Normally I wouldn't have thought twice about it, but I did call. I HOPE IT WAS GARBAGE IN THAT BAG, and if it wasn't I hope it was the remainder of what they were looking for and not something new.

I saw two bags near the flea market in saylorsburg on Sunday, but I figured it was just garbage, so I did not call police. I see many on my way from Strbg to Wind Gap (usually warm weather though), and I reported the ones I saw just a couple weeks before she was found. One was also on the median. I only reported it because I thought, what if they drove from Goulsboro 2-3 weeks ago (I wasnt positive when I saw them and that was b4 timeline), turned around in Stbrg and then went from Stbg onto 209/33/ and either went to Easton/NJ/etc or turned back around. I would just feel terrible if the family couldn't bury all of her and the poor girl was also at the dump! The Salylorburg ones seemed like a normal place for garbage from the flea market to be put at and I don't want to call the cops and seem like a whackjob, but, I tell you, I will never look at a bag on the road the same way again! No matter what she did in life, how horrible! I just hate knowing how little people value others in today's society.

This doesn't have me paranoid, but I am even more cautious. I had a car (actually fitting the description of the one she got into!) here this weekend and I wouldn't open the door for them. Freaked me out that several people in a crappy car were in my driveway and some get out and come to the door. I know my JehWit that come here and they drive nice vehicles and always leave pamphlets. I am just happy I have dogs that would attack and an armed weapon!!! I think we all need that!

PA's DARE license plate is white and the other one you see all the time is white in middle with yellow and blue borders. Mostly white! Jersey is yellow! CT is white fading to blue I have seen. DC,VI,RI,MD, MASS, NY, ME,MI, FL, GA, IL IND, OK, have a white one. So, we cannot assume where they are from.

I don't care what this girl did in her life, how awful. But I think we need to learn that you have to be cautious! People do not care about others anymore. Don't answer your door, keep an eye out, and lock EVERYTHING, ALWAYS. I have great neighbors who watch out for me, but I think I would call the cops next time someone pulled into my driveway and got out. My dogs let me know before they even pull in!

Before I drove down to Jersey there was a car like that parked in the parking lot of WalMart in Lehigh. I only noticed it because it was hard for me to pull out of my handicapped spot, or I never would have thought twice about it. Pulled into your driveway? That would have freaked me. Yes, Dogs are the answer. I have one, and she goes! She'd rip them apart if she didn't know them.

Windgap, Jersey's plates usually get confused with white because they are a very very light yellow-there's only a slight yellow tinge to them. You and I could take bets on this, but my money is still on Jersey plates...just feel it in my gut. Call it intuition.

It sickens me, this whole thing. Im still in Jersey haven't left yet, but when I woke up the number for the State Police was on my cell phone. I will be calling them back to see what they wanted. Im still freaked out about it. My sister and my family can hardly believe that this is happening in PA. Neither can I. When I moved here 5 years ago...this was God's country to me, and in some ways still is (moving here from a small shore town), but it's getting scarier everyday. Part of me hopes I helped in some small way, the other part hopes they found garbage.

A severed head and other dismembered remains found stuffed in trashed bags and scattered along Pocono Mountain highways have been identified as those of a missing woman, state police said Monday.

Deanna Maria Null, 36, was reported missing by her family after authorities circulated a description of the victim. She was identified using dental records.

No arrests have been made.

The remains were found scattered along Interstates 380 and 80 in northeastern Pennsylvania, state police said. The first bag was found Jan. 29 by a worker salting roads.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks. It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said.

Null lived in the Scranton and Williamsport areas but was "relatively transient," he said. The last time she was seen alive was in mid-January.

Tuesday morning update - Dismembered body identified

U.S. Rep. Paul Kanjorski was in "the epicenter of the subprime crisis" on Monday. That is, the Poconos. He brought news of help for those with mortgage problems.

February 05, 2008

The woman whose body parts were found strewn along two interstates in the Poconos last week has been identified. Police are now examining her life for clues to why she died and who did it.

It's Super Tuesday, more than 20 states are holding primaries. In the Poconos, an online invitation for voters to register their preferences prior to our April primary produced a result the frontrunners won't like.

Good news for Poconos homeowners facing foreclosure: $230 million in federal funding. But it's for counseling and intervention, not to pay off mortgages. U.S. Rep. Paul Kanjorski, D-11, unveiled the program Monday in Monroe County, in what one agency director called "the epicenter of the subprime crisis." We'd agree. Not only did we have as many as 2,000 foreclosures through local and federal-level action in 2007, we've had a problem with home financing scams that's made headlines since 2001. Cynics will note that no government action was taken until the stock portfolios of those who bought bad mortgages as securities were threatened.

Are you in love? Tell us about it. It's almost Valentine's Day.

Opinion page editor Paula Heeschen finished a one-month reporting sabbatical and is back pounding out editorials demanding we heed the voices of the angels on our shoulders. Today: Why even a flawed system of primary elections beats the alternative -- bombs and blood -- hands down.

We have an athletic crop of high school seniors this year. Some of them are being courted by colleges because of their accomplishments.

Body

A dismembered body found in garbage bags strewn along Interstates 380 and 80 in the Poconos last week was identified Monday as the remains of a woman who had been staying in Scranton.

Officials said the victim was Deanne Marie Null, 36, who they said has also lived in the Williams-port area. She was identified through dental records.

Troopers at the Swiftwater barracks said they were looking for a car that might have figured in Null's death. It was described as a blue or black Cadillac or Buick, from the late 1970s or early '80s, with a four- or five-strip chrome luggage rack on the trunk lid. It had a white license plate from an unknown state.

The car was last seen about two weeks ago at Olive and Capouse streets in Scranton, troopers said.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing after authorities circulated a description of the victim, said state police Lt. Robert Bartal.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks. It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing," Bartal said.

Bartal said Null was "relatively transient." The last time she was seen alive was in mid-January, he said. "There's a two-week gap we're trying to close."

Monroe County District Attorney E. David Christine Jr. said Null had been "staying with friends in Scranton."

Troopers were developing leads Monday night, Christine said. "Now that they know who the deceased was, they are trying to connect the dots in terms of who did this to her," he said.

According to Internet property records, Null had lived in an apartment in Scranton that was a little more than a mile from the spot where state police said the Cadillac or Buick was last seen.

Anyone with information about the case is asked to contact state police at Swiftwater at 570-839-7701 or 1-866-403-2946.

The dentist who identified Null was from Allentown, state police said.

Dennis Asen, who specializes in forensic dentistry, examined the remains and identified the victim by matching her teeth to dental records provided by state police.

Highway body is identified; Police say victim is Deanne M. Null, who was last seen alive in Scranton.

Authorities have used Asen's services many times before -- notably after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, when he helped identify victims of the hijacked plane that crashed in Somerset County. He also helped identify victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Dental comparison "is almost like DNA comparison," Asen said, likening the 32 teeth of the adult mouth to a 32-digit combination. Old dental work, filling color, missing teeth and many other details can help the examiner make a match.

In a 1996 case, Asen helped Easton police investigators match a piece of discarded chewing gum to a suspect in the murder of a 13-year-old girl, placing the man where the girl's remains were discovered.

Teeth sometimes provide the last hope of identification, said Asen, who has worked in the field for nearly 30 years and, in his spare time, writes mystery novels featuring a crime-solving forensic dentist.

"The position of the teeth in the mouth is what makes them durable," Asen said. "They're protected by the cheeks and lips. In a fire, where the rest of the body may be burned beyond recognition, the teeth and filling won't burn. ... They're durable and they're protected."

Pocono voters share their candidate choices

By SUSAN KOOMAR
Record Senior Managing Editor

Pocono voters have strong opinions on the presidential race even though Pennsylvania's far-off primary is not until April 22.

On Monday, we posted an invitation online asking readers to share their candidate preference.

Ron Paul was by far the favorite.

Reader Matt Ross put it succinctly: "Ron Paul. Why? Because he follows the Constitution. Period. End of story."

Interestingly, Ron Paul, to our knowledge, is the only presidential candidate with a visible presence in the Poconos so far. His supporters have rallied at Seventh and Main Streets in Stroudsburg, waving signs and talking with passersby.

A participant in our online forums went so far as to offer advice to Paul-loving Independents about Pennsylvania's closed primary (Independents aren't permitted to vote).

"To all the ones saying 'I would vote for It's the Independents that will push him over the top if they would vote for him. My husband is registered Democrat and my son is an Independent, they are both changing to Republican so they can vote for Dr. Paul," wrote WhizzKid.

Among other Republicans, Mitt Romney and Mike Huckabee have support, but few spoke up for John McCain.

Democrats and Republicans have reached the biggest primary day in the nation's history with this much in common: No major candidate on either side has yet offered up ideas or policies that amount to a new ideological course for the country.

As voting unfolds today on this Super Tuesday, the two hottest candidates at the moment — Republican John McCain and Democrat Barack Obama — are most striking for their ability to appeal to independent voters in the middle of the ideological spectrum, and for their willingness to compromise to get there.

In other words, the election of 2008,

Congress earmarks $230M for people facing foreclosure

By HOWARD FRANK
Pocono Record Writer

U.S. Rep. Paul Kanjorski, D-11, on Monday announced $230 million in federal funding to help homeowners facing foreclosure, unveiling the program in Monroe County in what one agency director called "the epicenter of the subprime crisis."

"Many families facing the threat of losing their homes to foreclosure can negotiate changes to the terms of their mortgages if they communicate with their lenders, but the need help in understanding how to do that," Kanjorski said.

The funds will be used for credit counseling and intervention.

Counseling agencies will help homeowners facing financial distress to work with their lender to avoid foreclosure. The funds will make it possible for more families facing foreclosure to get help in negotiating changes to their mortgages.

The counseling services will be provided through a combination of local, state and federal agencies. Representatives from several agencies accompanied Kanjorski for the announcement. Kanjorski chose Monroe County to announce the program, because, he said, the county was first to experience the devastating effects of predatory lending practices back in 2000.

"Monroe County's experience in predatory lending in 2000 provided insight into the problem the country now faces," Kanjorski said.

The program includes $180 million for NeighborWorks America, which will make grants to credit counseling agencies approved by the Department of Housing and Null's remains, including her severed head, were found Jan. 29 in bags scattered along highways. The first of the bags was found on Interstate 380 in Coolbaugh Township by a Pennsylvania Department of Transportation crew treating roads in preparation for freezing rain. The bag was in the median.

Police have talked to Null's mother and a man who may have been her boyfriend. They have no suspects in the case yet.

Police would not say if all of Null's remains have been found.

When last seen, Null was unemployed, but had signed up with a temp agency, Bartl said.

A warrant for Null's arrest was issued in Sept. 2007 for non-payment of costs and fines.

In 2003, she was among seven people arrested in a $300,000 cocaine ring in Lycoming and Northumberland counties. Null was sentenced to one year of intermediate punishment — a type of supervised probation — along with 12 months of additional probation. But she violated the probation terms and was re-sentenced to state prison.

Lenders want to help distressed borrowers — it's in their best interests. "Lenders do not make money on foreclosures. They want to keep people in their homes if they can," he said. The problem, according to Kanjorski, has been that many homeowners aren't aware of the options available to them as they face foreclosure.

"By merely contacting the lender, many of these homes can be taken out of foreclosure, and a new arrangement might be made," Kanjorski said.

Kanjorski estimates that three of every four homeowners facing foreclosure could be benefit from the program. The counseling services will be offered free of charge.

Kanjorski blamed weakened regulations for the fall of the home mortgage market. "Less stringent rules were put in place to increase private home ownership," he said. Those rules led to irresponsible borrowing practices.

"We lost some of our good sense and honor in the U.S. Greed has taken over for some," he said.

To make the point, Kanjorski said that although about 70 percent of conventional mortgages escrow taxes and insurance, less than 25 percent of subprime loans do. Many homeowners are unaware of their insurance and tax obligations, and, without setting aside monthly funds to pay for it, they could fall into foreclosure.

easy, though. Kanjorski said it will take many small solutions to help remedy the current credit crisis. "There is no silver bullet in this," he said.

Kanjorski said the counseling agencies have their own programs to reach out to people in need, and hoped that public service announcements might be used to help publicize the programs.

"This is the epicenter of the subprime mortgage crisis," Mike

Hanley said, referring to Monroe County. He is the executive director of the United Neighborhood Centers of North Eastern Pennsylvania, a non-profit housing counseling agency.

"What began in Monroe County is now affecting the country and is being felt all over the world," Hanley said.

Hanley encouraged those in trouble to contact his agency.

All three Monroe County commissioners attended Kanjorski's meeting, along with representatives for Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa.; state Sen. Lisa M. Boscola, D-18; state Rep. Mario Scavella, R-176; and state Rep. John J. Siptroth, D-189.

Kanjorski said the $230 million appropriation is just for the current year. "We will be appropriating more money for sure," he said.

And he made his motive for the appropriation clear. "These people are Americans, and they are in distress. Let's help them," he said.

But for Sharon Davis, it's too little too late. A local resident who commutes to New York, Davis said she lost her home two years ago.

"People need to feel a sense of justice and to see that the predatory lenders are made accountable. I want people to be held responsible," she said.

thus far, is less about ideology and ideas and more about governing style and leadership ability — intangible qualities on which voters are placing a higher priority than on issues. The tenor seems a reflection of the country's mood: Many voters are in revolt against the partisan wars and bouts of gridlock that have gripped Washington in recent years, and are seeking effectiveness above all.

That makes the election debate so far quite different from, say, 1980, when Ronald Reagan settled a debate within the Republican Party by offering a new conservative course of giant tax cuts and big defense spending. It's also different from 1992, when Bill Clinton molded a different Democratic Party by moving to the right on trade, the budget deficit and welfare reform. Those were big policy ideas that also happened to have big political impact.

Yet that doesn't appear to be what voters are seeking this primary season. On the Democratic side, "there is no correlation in the exit polls so far between the issues people think are important and the candidates they vote for," says Andrew Kohut, who conducts polling for the Pew Research Center. "It's about the qualities of the person."

In the South Carolina primary on Jan. 26, exit polls indicated that Democratic voters who said the economy was the most important issue voted for Sen. Hillary Clinton and Sen. Obama in nearly the same proportions as did those who said the war in Iraq or health care were the most important issues. And in the New Hampshire primary, Democrats who said they favored withdrawing all American troops from Iraq as soon as possible — voters who might have been expected to go toward Sen. Obama, the most staunchly anti-war candidate — instead broke for Sen. Clinton, 41 percent to 34 percent.

On the Republican side, a December Wall Street Journal/NBC News poll found that the characteristic on which John McCain ranked lowest among Republicans surveyed was: "Shares your position on issues." He scored higher on such traits as being knowledgeable and experienced enough to handle the presidency, and being honest and straightforward. Nevertheless, Sen. McCain has assumed clear front-runner status and was in a commanding position in national polls going into today's primaries.

One Republican voter looking past issue positions is Rick Page of Wheaton, Ill., who works in commercial real estate. He says the economy is the top issue for him. He has studied former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney's positions on the economy, he says, but has picked Sen. McCain for his governing style.

"I like the straight talk," Page says. "He just lays it out like it is. Sometimes it doesn't sound great. It's not what you want to hear, but you know what he believes."

Once the primaries are past, of course, there will be big differences on key issues between the Republican and Democratic nominees. In particular, there is likely to be a stark debate over the wisdom of the Iraq war, particularly if the nominees are Sen. McCain, who has turned defense of the war into a cornerstone of his candidacy, and Sen. Obama, who has trumpeted his opposition to the war from the outset.

If Sen. McCain is the Republican nominee, that will bring about a "fundamental debate," says William Galston, an analyst at the Brookings Institution who worked in the Clinton White House. "Sen. McCain sees the future of Iraq through our experience in West Germany and South Korea," which became permanent outposts of American power, Galston says. Any Democratic nominee isn't likely to share that vision, he says.

But that debate will be more about dealing with the residue of a past decision — the Iraq invasion — than about charting a new ideological course for America in the world. Indeed, the debates now under way within the two parties are striking for their lack of new direction.

To some extent, voters seem to be looking for candidates who can transcend the paralyzing policy debates of the past decade, a feature of a national government closely divided between Democrats and Republicans. To many voters, precisely what gets done seems less important than the prospect that something actually will get done.

The growing numbers of voters registered as independents, and the tendency of young voters to respond to Sen. Obama's portrayal of himself as a "post-partisan" politician, show the direction public sentiment is moving.

"Results do matter, and competence matters," says Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, a supporter of Sen. Obama. "But at SWIFTWATER — Mystery surrounds Deanna Marie Null's violent death, but police can now look to her troubled life for answers.

Null was identified Monday as the woman whose dismembered remains were found last Tuesday dumped in garbage bags along Interstates 80 and 380.

Null, 36, had no permanent address, but lived in the Williamsport and Scranton areas, police said. She had a history of drug offenses and served time in state prison.

Nobody reported her missing. She was last seen alive in mid-January, said state police Lt. Robert Bartal at the Swiftwater barracks.

Her family contacted police after hearing a news report with a description of the murder victim based on autopsy results. Null was identified Friday by a forensic dentist.

She was last seen getting into a 1970s or 80s, dark-colored Cadillac or Buick sedan with a cloth or leather top, a four- or five-strip chrome luggage rack on the trunk lid and a white license plate (registration unknown). The driver was a black man, between 5 feet 9 and 6 feet tall, with a short, military-style haircut and stocky build, police said.

Police want tips from the public. Call (570) 839-7701 or (866) 403-2946.

"We're trying to find out where (Null) was between the time she was last seen and the time her remains were found (as well as the identity of the driver of the vehicle she was seen getting into)," Bartal said. "We're trying to find anyone who saw or heard from her during that time period."

Null's remains, including her severed head, were found Jan. 29 in bags scattered along highways. The first of the bags was found on Interstate 380 in Coolbaugh Township by a Pennsylvania Department of Transportation crew treating roads in preparation for freezing rain. The bag was in the median.

Police have talked to Null's mother and a man who may have been her boyfriend. They have no suspects in the case yet.

Police would not say if all of Null's remains have been found.

When last seen, Null was unemployed, but had signed up with a temp agency, Bartal said.

A warrant for Null's arrest was issued in Sept. 2007 for non-payment of costs and fines.

In 2003, she was among seven people arrested in a $300,000 cocaine ring in Lycoming and Northumberland counties. Null was sentenced to one year of intermediate punishment — a type of supervised probation — along with 12 months of additional probation. But she violated the probation terms and was re-sentenced to state prison.

Reporter Phil Holmes of the Williamsport Sun Gazette contributed to this story.

I think as we post, we should remember this, if this was your child, your sister, or your mother, would you want to read what you are typing? Would you want to hear that this is what happens when you get involved in all this? We all know that hanging out with certain types of people increases your risk of harm, but what about all the people - men, women, children, young, old, weak, strong - who just disappear? Look at the missing persons reports and you will see, people of all cultures and lifestyles just vanish. I am hoping stories start coming out from her friends and families about how much she was cared about and good things she has done.

I agree with you Windgap and I do hope Good stories also come of this, BOTH stories should be told, if we hide the drug aspect of this how will our children learn what Drugs and crime can do to a person. This story scared the hell out of my kids one a teen, Now I can tell them that drugs probably played a role in it and scare them more. Maybe this story will scare a "user" enough for them to seek help, you never know. People need to hear consequences of actions. I am sure this woman was not a bad person, she was a mother and a daughter who made the wrong choices in life and my heart goes out to her family, I do not want my kids going down that path and education is important. Mabey Deannas story can help others out there.

I had a brother in law who had a similar track record and was beat to death on his birthday and left to die in a steel mill in Claymont Delaware, his murders are still at large and this was 10 years ago, my husbands family faces a terrible feeling in there gut everyday. Pocono Record is not speaking "ill" of the deceased, they are stating facts that may have lead up to the events that happened, it is important. Mabey a family member will come foward and make a statement on the type of good person she was, dispite the addiction, intill then what would you like the PR to write?

I don't see anyone speaking very "ill" of the victim. People are simply stating the facts of the case as we know them thus far. No name calling or wild speculation that I've noticed.

We had a matching car come into our driveway this weekend. A couple people stayed in it (various races) and two came to our door. The one's face obscured by a hat. We didn't open the door. A type of person that lives this life style does not think about getting in a car with white plates or anything else for that matter. A person involved in drugs or has a jail record, things and acts differently then most people.

Anyone with the life style she had and probably had for years usually winds up in a bad situation.

It is very sad, but this is what happens. To bad the drugs take over and they don't think clearly.

"A person involved in drugs or has a jail record, things and acts differently then most people."

I'm not completely sold on the idea it was drug related just because she was arrested for drugs in the past. Drugs cannot be deemed the be all end all reason for anything bad that happens to an individual after a drug arrest.

As for people that have been in jail thinking differently, I've counseled many people recently released from prison over the years. Many of them have seen the error in their ways and go on to be upstanding citizens. There is the real world and then there is the world put forth by Hollywood where anyone convicted of a crime or with a previous addiction is some embodiment of evil that can never be trusted again because they are no longer like "us".

In the end it could be drug related, but I think it is a little early to rule out everything else.

hscott - Deanna Marie Null was a white female from Williamsport and Scranton area. She had a history of drug offenses and served time in state prison. She was arrested in a $300,000 cocaine ring in Lycoming and Northumberland counties. Not cool to speak ill of the dead but what gives you the right to make this a New York person thing? Because the licesne plate was white? That is pitiful, insecure and needless to say really reaching! You should not strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.

Has there been anything written about drug abuse? I may have just missed it, but I don't recall seeing abuse. From what I've read it seems she was arrested for distribution. People brought down by a DA investigation of a distribution circle are rarely addicts. They are dealers. Also, before they ID'd her it said the victim was "heavy set". Someone who habitually uses cocaine, heroin, meth, etc. is not "heavy set", quite the opposite in fact. Especially after years of abuse, as some of these post insinuate.

I just don't think we know enough yet to even make an educated guess as to what happened.

The facts are there for what they are worth. She had a bad past and she made mistakes that could have put her in harms way. However, I am just upset that is all we have heard about her. What about what she was like as a daughter, friend, mother etc. Getting involved in drugs and with the people who sell them is putting yourself at risk. But like I have said before, it could just have easily been me coming out of the supermarket and taken. Would we assume then that food shopping increases your risk and must have led to my death? I just think I was upset by the sense that a lot of people were saying that she put herself in harms way and we shouldn't be surprised. That you get involved in drugs and look what happens. Drugs are bad! All people should know that and stay away, but some people are killed because of them while others end up becoming president! So, generalizations dont always work. It could have been entirely a domestic dispute or a random act. We do not know, so to go and assume it was because of things SHE did is disrespectful to her family. She was the victim of a violent crime. It is the family's place to warn the public that if it turns out drug related, that you should watch who get involved with. For us to say it is cruel.

Ny does have some white plates. I posted a message with all the legit colors for neighboring states. CT, VA, DC, PA (white in middle and also the DARE (irony) license plates are white), and many others have white. Too many to assume where it is from. NJ is yellow and most people around here can spot a Jersey plate a mile away!

And because SHE was from Scranton doesn't mean he or they are. If you look at how they drove, they could have picked her up, did what they did, and then came towards Stroudsburg, turned around and hopped on 33 and gone towards Allentown, NJ, anywhere. They could be from ANYWHERE. I am sure they will be checking surveillance cameras from the area to see if a bank's camera got a glimpse of it. At least, that is what the CSI's do!! We will not know until they catch the bastards and there are enough people aware of this crime that someone knows something and will come forward. If it is drug-related, they could always get someone trying to make a deal in the future that comes forward. I think we will know who it is relatively soon. Too many people care about this poor girl now to let it go.

IT is not up to us to judge her for how she lived. It is up to us to prevent this from happening again and punish whoever did this. The way the authorities reacted seems to indicate someone that has done this before and will do this again. Someone that would do what they did was seeking attention. They could have just as easily put the parts in a swamp somewhere. If that is the case that means they are most likely reading this. Cool. PA is a shall issue state. Anyone with a clean record, references to vouch they are not crazy dope fiend-drunks, and the will to do so can carry a concealed firearm. I would recommend if you have the knowledge, training, and the will to go do so. Or get mace, anything to not be a victim sheep. Spitfire makes a good, cheap, concealable keychain mace for those people not comfortable with firearms. Do not be a victim, this person(people?) is/are still out there.

gonzoso, in no way shape or form am i judging this lady. that's not my style. truth be told we all have drug addicts, etc... in our own families - i know i have a few in my own. so.....all i'm doing is following the stereotype and making an analysis. that this car description sounds like a pimp type car. and if this guy spreaded her body all across the highway, maybe it was to send the rest of the prostitutes a message about messing with his money or something, or maybe she robbed him or whatever - but this murder style don't really sound like a pimp type of thing. so on the other hand, maybe this guy was just her pimp and picked her up, got his money, dropped her back off, and she got into another "johns" car and you know you have to be some kind of freak to pick up a prostitute these days with all this disease mess going around anyway. do you ever watch them "life on the street" kind of shows at night? all those prostitutes describe some crazy azz men, and i mean crazy with all kinds of freaky off the wall things they like done. sooo....her being a prostitute would make perfect sense.

I agree the thing about it is how Obvious they were!! Throwing the body in plain sight you got it there were so many places that it would take a long time to find they wanted it found pretty quickly! The fact of what they did to this poor woman regardless how she lived is sick & to flaunt it like this is disturbing!

The 1st thing I thought of was the person who skinned those dogs & left em for everyone to find then to hear this I said to my husband did they graduate to a person now.

Sorry to this family no one deserves this & my prayers go out to you I hope they catch who ever did it cause they could do it again if they had the guts to do it like that!

I wasn't saying you were stereotyping, I was not refering to your post at all, the reply button was just the closest one:) You were thinking and creating a hypothesis which is good. What isn't good is all these other people saying "oh, she was a druggie, she got what she deserved." This is not useful. Her history could be used to find out what happened, but criticizing her lifestyle is insensitive and a waste of time. Personally, I have been teaching my gf more self defense basics and maintaining situational awareness. Police won't protect anyone, they are there to punish, not prevent. People have to realize they are responsible for their own safety.

NO ONE in here ever said anyone deserves to die that way, and our hearts do go out to the family, we are just trying to throw pieces of the puzzle together to see how this all became. No one is saying anything bad about her personally. People sometimes get mixed up in things, bad things and can not get out of them that does not make you a bad person, it means you made wrong choices, I am sure she was good hearted, like another forum said she knew her and she went down the wrong path as a younger woman & could not turn back. It happens to people everyday, like I said I wish the family would come forward with some positive stories about her, I am sure there are many.

I know most people wouldn't want a mother like that, but I accept her anyways and I wouldn't ask for anything more. I hope that the police find the #### who murdered her and he bums when he dies, I hope he gets what is coming to him. My family and I are VERY devastated as to what happened, and for all of you out there who are saying #### about the incident, you need to have some respect for me and my family. You have NO idea how hard of a time we're having and it makes it even worse to get on news sites and see people bashing my own mother. She's not a horrible person, she just got on the wrong path in life and there was nothing to do to stop her and I'm very sorry for that. I do want to thank all of you who are helping us out by feeling badly for us and our situation. I could not thank you enough.-Deanna's Daughter

I am SO sorry for your loss. I couldn't imagine it. We all have things in our past and it despises me that that is what is focused on in times like these. I am hoping that we will hear soon all the good stories about her and how much she was loved and loved back. She looked like a sweet girl that got lost a little. I think many of us have been or loved people in that situation and the story ending this way is the worst thing you could imagine. Many people want to know who did this and are trying to wrap their minds around it and I think some people want to blame her past for it because then they can distance themselves and not worry about it happening to them. Most people here just feel horrible for what she went through and what you are going through now. It does sicken me that with little rich girls like the Halloway girl, everyone assumes there is a monster lurking. When you aren't as prominent, they assume you brought that monster into your life and should have known better. I will pray for your family and hope somehow you all get through this. The talk about her being certain things, I will not repeat it - it was in very bad taste and I apologize for those people!!! I cannot believe the things people say after a life is lost. I hope they catch him/them soon, for all of our safety, but also so your healing process can begin.

Deanna daughter,
Our hearts go out to you, everyone is just trying to understand this, your mom, even though we don't personally know her has become a part of all of us on here, I can not, nor would I ever want to go threw what you are going threw, our hearts go out to you and the family. They will catch this ####.
I know everyone makes mistakes, none of us on here are perfect and I would never judge your mom. Our prayers are with you and the family. I have seen what drugs can do to a family and you need to stay strong. Remember all the good things about your mom and the rest will not matter.

Yes, we'd see eachother off and on, but we would never be with eachother enough to have good memories. So sorry i don't have anything for you, but i guess that's life, isn't it??

I hope you have loving aunts, uncles, and grandparents to help you, hold you and love you.

No one deserves to die this way. I hope they catch this person soon and I truly believe they will.

To you bunch of idiots posting stuff when you don't even know the victim, stop it and get a life. It could have been one of you family, and do want us to check what they have done? Not! People are not perfect, so go back to your perfect families and stay out of here. To the ones that have been bashing the cops on this case, you too go away. Most people won't ever look a cop into their eyes, and never have been out there, and it seems to me they are doing a pretty good job on this one.

Your Mom is just like the rest of us, a unique creation. My alcoholic mother left 5 children when we were all young and she stayed away. Spend time with your family and friends. You can still talk to her sweetheart.

About the NY plates, do we forget that PA plates are also white with blue just as are NY plates and North Carolina and alot of other plates out there. Do the research !!!! I am from NY and I have seen just as many sick people from all other states including PA living here in PA. I have also seen more sick stuff here then in NY for 36 years. Just because someone is from NY doesn't make them a butcher, it makes a very #@%& sick individual. The main thing is that they find the SOB that did this and punish them to the full extent of the law.

My condolences go out to her family who are the one suffering right now because nobody deserves to die that way NOBODY. I don't care what her past was, she is still a human being. We all have cobwebs in our closets, Deanna just got stuck up in her's. Just remember no matter where these animals are from who did this to this poor woman the fact of the matter is they are still out there. WE ALL HAVE NO IDEA WHO THEY, HE OR SHE IS, THAT IS WHAT SCARES ME MOST. They, he or she could be standing next to us in a gas station or store and we wouldn't even know it and that is scary.

Wow...did alot of this get out of hand.

FIRST AND FOREMOST...to the daughter, boyfriend and family of Deanna, my sincerest condolences. I know it has been said a thousand times here, but I must reiterate, NO ONE deserves to die as she did. To the daughter: I have had a family member murdered in this way 18 yrs ago in NY. He was killed in a hotel by someone who hated gay men. I guess the local bashers would say that it was his own fault too because he was gay. It still doesn't make MURDER RIGHT. I know the shock, disbelief, pain saddness, anger....all the emotions you are faced with.

You need to remember sweetie...people come in all different shapes and ways...some with more heart than not. Don't take anything you read here personally....no one here has ever walked a day in your shoes. No one knew your mother as you did...no one here can see inside your heart. LISTEN TO YOUR HEART. You know your mother cared and loved you, but you know she may have had an ILLNESS called addiction. Remember this too: No one ever just wakes up one day and says to themselves "Gee, I think I'll become a drug addict today", or I'll just sell drugs, etc.

Surround yourself with the rest of your family now. Stick together, and love each other as much as you can. Forget these forums...people can sometimes be mean, JUST AS MANY HERE HAVE sent warm heart felt feelings. We all just wish there was something we could do. We cannot imagine what you are going through. Stay strong!

FORGET what her past was...ONE HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH THE OTHER-she did not bring this on herself, she was in the wrong place with the wrong people...THAT'S ALL, and leave it at that. SHE DID NOT ASK FOR THIS NO MATTER WHAT HER HABITS WERE.

To otheor comments.....

About Plates.....pleeeze!!!! I'm from Jersey and I have already said five times I think they are Jersey plates. God forbid somebody even says "NY" and everybody jumps....why is that????? This garbage about NY/NJ/PA it's all garbage....people need to grow up about it already. There's crime and bad people in EVERY STATE...unfortunately some more than others, but it's everywhere. Teach your children well...it begins at home! The thing to remember folks is that it's already been established that it's an out of state plate...say no more! This may or may not mean that the Feds will be brought in. Hopefully they will to assist our police and get to the killer quickly-this is what we should be hoping for. As for the local debate about police bashers...don't even go there. Why is it that people always need to hijack a thread? THIS IS ABOUT A HUMAN BEING WHO WAS murdered in a most grizzly manner. Why can't we spend our time sending good thoughts to the family and praying for her soul and hoping that justice will be swift?

They will find who did this and the animal will pay. My guess is that she may not be the first victim, BUT HOPEFULLY AND GOD WILLING SHE WILL BE THE LAST.

God rest your soul Deanna.

To the daughter and he BF, my prayers and sorrows to you. Some folks go a little overboard, my self included at times. Many times we say things in here , not meaning to be hurtful, but trying to make sense of the craziness to ourselves, exploring theories and such. We try to imagine the worst , sometimes that makes more sense, sometimes the truth is far removed.

It looks like mom had various issues over the years, learn from them, grow.

If you 2 ever have kids, do better by them.

Like most of us here, we also hope the perp in this case is found, this person is an animal, not fit for society.

Catchur - I had to read that a couple times. Thought you were yelling at me to stop speculating and let police handle the fact that I thought you worked with a friend of ours. Sorry - no coffee yet so only about an eighth of the brain is working.

We are all curious, because as much as this really devastates friends and loved ones of hers, it does affect us all. We all have thoughts running through are head, we all feel so bad for her and those who knew her, and we all want this figured out asap. Speculation doesn't bother me, it is natural, as long as it is respectful. Lets not assume things about this poor woman or even link her past to the cause. Yes, drugs could be a reason for this, but it could be if I were kidnapped and I have never done or been around them. Many drugdealers will be violent as a means to an end and they will be that way towards anyone they see in their way. Any one of us could have been this poor woman. Often, the rate of chance goes up depending on who you are around, but that is not always the case. Some people may not agree with her lifestyle, but we need to remember - whether she was not a perfect or good one or one that was around much - she was still someone's mom and daughter and speak about her as you would your loved one. We all know someone who has wandered off the beaten path and it crushed us, imagine if this was the end to that story, what would you want to see people write about it?

Daughter, boyfriend and Family of Deanna,

I knew Deanna as a teen (I was good friends with your aunt at the time) and I remember her bubbly laugh and what a sweet girl she was. I had heard years later of the difficulties she was dealing with and my heart always went out to her. I would sometimes run into your grandmother and she would always tell me what beautiful children you were and that you were what got her through everything. Use this and be there for each other during this unimaginable time. Have faith and know that your Mom is looking down on you and will always be with you. You and your family will remain in my thoughts and prayers. God bless you all and may peace be with you.

What you read here and in the papers is not the whole story nor is it accurate. You should be more careful what you say or suggest happened or did not happen. Saying "nobody cared to report her missing" is a big statement from someone who has no clue what happened. I suggest the next time you want to post a message don't base your comments on a newspaper, website or television news report. They are all doing the same thing you are doing. Making comments with very little info. This unfortunately has been happening a lot, and it is sad to see people like you make such narrow minded statements about a family that has suffered so much pain.

If you were referring to my posts about the car and the people at my house QUI, I NEVER open my door to strangers. EVER. I always assume people are there for no good reason, but I am not paranoid to say I think a serial killer or someone like this shows up at my house of all places. (although a close family member was a patient of Cullen's). I called it in anyway and let them sort it out. I have street smarts, I never trust anyone, but I am not one to get carried away over nothing. I am not going to call the cops on every car that comes into my driveway, but I have known not to answer the door to strangers since I was 3! QUI. I think you need to really read the posts before commenting to get what we are saying, or just jump into a new forum, not one with so many posts.

I think everybody on this forum needs to have a little more compassion for her and her family . The remarks I have read on here from some of you are really out of line . You need to put yourself in the shoes of this family and take a good look at what went on. This is not a pretty picture at all. And with the way people act anymore it could have been any of us in this situation . I hope they find the SOB that did this and string him up by his gonads . That is all I have to say because it sickens me to think there is someone out there knowing they did this and can live with there selfs .

everybody on this site feels deeply for the family and yes i agree there are some harsh things being said and everybody wants this person, but if you think it is so disgraceful what people are saying why are you on this forum? human nature brings everybody to these kinds of forums because even though they don't want to admit it, they want to know all about it.

It was another forum message in here, They were talking about the mug shot photo and the "Bad stories of her past" I said we only know about her what the PR tells us, I suggest that the family tell some nice stories or send in a different family photo, she did have a family you know!!! You should not jump in if you don't know what is going on you will only #### people off.

thank you for your reply, but you must admit that 1st comment about the pic's was misleading. i do not agree with you on any family photo's being shown, i believe the family has enough camera's in their face where ever they go. having nice stories is a good thing and i believe everybody would agree (maybe) i was not trying to #### you off just stating a comment that sounded a little off. please do not be offended, it was not my intention.

Staff Writers The woman whose severed head and body parts were discovered along two area interstates last week has been identified as Deanna Marie Null, 36, of the Scranton and Williamsport areas.

State police at Swiftwater said Null was "relatively transient" and they do not have any suspects.

However, they do have a lead.

Null was last seen getting into a late model, dark-colored sedan two weeks ago near Olive Street and Capouse Avenue, Scranton, state police said. The vehicle, possibly a Cadillac or Buick, has a cloth or leather top, a four or five chrome strip luggage rack on the trunk and white license plates. A black male, 5-foot-9 to 6-feet tall with a stocky build and military-style haircut was driving the car, state police said.

"Hopefully, people will come forward who have known her or had any dealings with her," said State Police Cpl. Lynn Courtright.

Null's body was found discarded in trash bags at eight locations Jan. 29 on Interstates 380 and 80 in Lackawanna and Monroe counties.

Her family called state police Thursday to report her missing after authorities circulated a description of the victim.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks," state police Lt. Robert Bartal told the Associated Press. "It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing."

She was identified through dental records by forensic odontologist, Dennis Asen.

Described as "relatively transient" by Bartal, court records show Null pleaded guilty in Lycoming County to charges of manufacturing drugs, delivery and possession with intent to manufacture and deliver as well as criminal conspiracy in a Lycoming County in 2003. Two years later she was charged with violating her parole. In September, a warrant for her arrest was issued because she failed to pay court costs and fines. A monthly payment history showed erratic payments ranging from $4.80 one month to $76.46.

Anyone with information on the case is asked to call state police at 839-7701 or toll-free at 866-403-2946.

Police ID remains of interstate victim

SWIFTWATER, Pa. - A severed head and other dismembered remains found stuffed in trashed bags and scattered along Pocono Mountain highways have been identified as those of a missing woman, state police said.

Deanna Maria Null, 36, was reported missing by her family after authorities circulated a description of the victim. She was identified using dental records.

No arrests have been made.

The remains were found scattered along Interstates 380 and 80 in northeastern Pennsylvania, state police said. The first bag was found Jan. 29 by a worker salting roads.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing.

Man called 911 to report murders

FOUNTAIN, Fla. - A man accused of killing his parents called 911, confessed to a dispatcher and said he was waiting to be arrested, authorities said.

Ricky Morris, 25, was being held on two murder charges at the Bay County jail.

Sheriff Frank McKeithen said Morris called 911 Sunday night, telling a dispatcher he had shot his parents with a hunting rifle and was waiting for a deputy to come arrest him at their home in the Florida Panhandle.

Deputies said he was calm and unemotional.

New law seeks to trim rooster flocks

RIVERSIDE, Calif. - Rooster owners in this Southern California city may be about to get their feathers ruffled.

Measure A on today's ballot seeks to muffle incessant cock-a-doodle-dooing and crack down on illegal cockfighting by limiting the number of roosters residents can own in rural areas within the city limits.

Nation & world

The current law allows 50 birds, but the measure would only allow seven and require the birds be confined to an "acoustical structure" at least 100 feet from neighbors from sunrise to sunset.

Men charged in fire

WORCESTER, Mass. - Two men are accused of burning down the birthplace of the woman made famous by the nursery rhyme "Mary Had a Little Lamb."

John Rousseau and Michael Dreslinski, who also face charges in a series of fires in central and western Massachusetts, have been held without bail since August.

They are scheduled to be arraigned Tuesday in connection with the Aug. 12 fire that destroyed a vacant house in Sterling where town officials say Mary Elizabeth Sawyer was born in 1806.

Sarah Josepha Hale reportedly published a poem in 1830 about Sawyer, as a child, bringing her lamb to school with her. Other accounts, however, claim the original writer was a young man who was inspired by the incident.

Body found in SUV is identified

HARRISBURG -- Authorities have identified the body found in a stolen sport utility vehicle in Harrisburg.

After an autopsy conducted Monday, it was determined that he was 24-year-old Gregory Streeps of Chambersburg. Police say he wasn't the vehicle's owner.

The vehicle was reported stolen in Chambersburg on Friday. It was found in Harrisburg the next day with the body inside. Streeps died of multiple gunshot wounds.

Police have identified a 24-year-old man as a suspect in the vehicle theft. He's still at large, and police believe he's armed.

BINGO PRIZES

House OKs boost

HARRISBURG -- The House voted 188-10 to double the amount of bingo prizes that licensed associations can award and to loosen rules about who may work at the games.

The daily limit was increased from $4,000 to $8,000, and group members can start working at games after being members for a month instead of having to wait a year. The bill was sent to the Senate.

GRUESOME FIND

Woman's remains

SWIFTWATER -- Police have identified a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were found in trash bags along two interstates in the Pocono Mountains.

Deanna Marie Null, 36, was killed and her remains dismembered, placed in trash bags and scattered along Interstates 380 and 80, state police said Monday. The first bag was found last Tuesday by a road worker salting I-380.

Null was last seen getting into an older-model sedan in Scranton two weeks ago, but police said they have no suspects.

Null's family called state police on Thursday to report her missing after authorities circulated a description of the victim. She was identified using dental records.

Null lived in the Scranton and Williamsport areas but was "relatively transient," state police Lt. Robert Bartal said. The last time she was seen alive was in mid-January.

Pennsylvania dispatches

"There's a two-week gap we're trying to close," Bartal said.

A man who answered the phone at a listing for Null in Williamsport identified himself as Null's brother-in-law but said the family did not want to comment.

The car that Null was seen getting into was described as an older-model (late 1970s or early 1980s), dark Buick or Cadillac sedan with a cloth or leather roof, chrome luggage rack and white license plate. Police described the driver as a black man, 5-feet-9 to 6 feet, with a short military-style haircut and a stocky build.

Court records indicate that Null pleaded guilty in Lycoming County to drug and conspiracy charges in 2003. Null violated her parole in 2005 and a warrant was issued for her arrest last September for failure to pay court costs and fines, records show.

The woman whose severed head and body parts were discovered along two area interstates last week has been identified as Deanna Marie Null, 36, of the Scranton and Williamsport areas. State Police at Swiftwater said Ms. Null was "relatively transient" and they do not have any suspects.

However, they do have a lead.

Ms. Null was last seen getting into a late model, dark-colored sedan two weeks ago near Olive Street and Capouse Avenue, state police said. The vehicle, possibly a Cadillac or Buick, has a cloth or leather top, a four or five chrome strip luggage rack on the trunk and white license plates. A black male, 5-foot-9 to 6-feet tall with a stocky build and military-style haircut was driving the car, state police said.

"Hopefully people will come forward who have known her or had any dealings with her," said State Police Cpl. Lynn Courtright.

Ms. Null's body was found discarded in trash bags at eight locations Jan. 29 on Interstates 380 and 80 in Lackawanna and Monroe counties.

Her family called state police Thursday to report her missing after authorities circulated a description of the victim.

"They had seen media coverage on it and knew they had not talked to her in a few weeks," state police Lt. Robert Bartal told The Associated Press. "It wasn't uncommon for her to be missing."

She was identified through dental records by forensic odontologist, Dennis Asen.

Described as "relatively transient" by Lt. Bartal, court records show Ms. Null pleaded guilty in Lycoming County to charges of manufacturing drugs, delivery and possession with intent to manufacture and deliver as well as criminal conspiracy in a Lycoming County in 2003. Two years later she was charged with violating her parole. In September, a warrant for her arrest was issued because she failed to pay court costs and fines. A monthly payment history showed erratic payments ranging from $4.80 one month to $76.46.

Anyone with information on the case is asked to call state police at 839-7701 or toll-free at 866-403-2946.

Woman's remains identified: Body parts found on interstates were those of Deanna Marie Null, 36, of Williamsport.

Feb. 5--The investigation into the human remains case in the Poconos got a huge break with the identification of the victim as Deanna Marie Null, a 36-year-old woman from Williamsport who frequented the Scranton area.

Null's identification makes it possible for investigators to look into the victim's background and into people associated with her, state police Lt. Robert Bartal and Sgt. Gregg Mrochko said.

State police at Swiftwater are investigating the human remains found scattered along interstates 80 and 380 on Jan. 29.

Media coverage of the discovery by a state road worker led Null's family to contact police on Thursday, Bartal said. Her family was notified when the remains were positively identified. The body parts were found in several trash bags along the highways.

Null was last seen getting into an older-model sedan in Scranton two weeks ago at Olive and Capouse streets, Bartal said, but police said they have no suspects and no arrest has been made.

The car that Null was seen getting into was described as an older-model (late 1970s or early 1980s), dark Buick or Cadillac sedan with a cloth or vinyl roof, chrome luggage rack and white license plate. Police described the driver as a black man, with short, close-cut hair.

The information on the vehicle was provided to authorities by people who identified themselves to police as the victim's friends in the Wilkes-Barre/Scranton area.

Police released the woman's identity on Monday, three days after forensic odontologist Dr. Dennis Asen positively identified her through dental records.

"We talked to several people that know her, but we don't know enough about her at this point," Bartal said. "Anyone that may have seen her in mid-January is asked to contact us."

An examination revealed the woman had a dental procedure that involved the removal of teeth, investigators said.

Bartal said this did not indicate evidence of a past drug addiction. There are no suspects, he said, and, at this point, it is believed the case was neither domestic nor drug-related. Police have not found a murder weapon.

Bartal said Null was a witness in a recent attempted homicide case in Williamsport, but he did not release specifics about her involvement.

Woman's remains identified: Body parts found on interstates were those of Deanna Marie Null, 36, of Williamsport.

"We are speaking to people that know her," Mrochko said. "Once we identified her, we can find out who she hung around with."

Bartal said Null had no permanent address in the Scranton area and resided in several apartments for about a year.

According to Lycoming County Court records, Null pleaded guilty in 2003 to two drug offenses in connection with her arrest in 2001 by the state Attorney General. In September, an arrest warrant was issued for Null for failure to pay court costs and fines.

A message left for Null's family in Williamsport on Monday was not returned.

After the body parts were discovered, police immediately determined the remains belonged to a light-skinned, heavysset female with dark and gray hairs, and about 5 feet, 7 inches tall.

Autopsy results revealed she suffered from multiple violent injuries, which caused her death, police said.

The remains were dumped near the Mount Pocono exit and 14 miles northbound along Interstate 380 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties. Two other bags were found 10 miles apart eastbound and westbound on Interstate 80.

A state road worker made the initial discovery while salting I-380 in Coolbaugh Township, Monroe County.

Investigators canvassed the interstates on foot and in the air on Thursday, finding several items of evidence from the Delaware Water Gap to the wooded hills of Gouldsboro in Lackawanna County.

Anyone with information about Null is asked to contact state police at Swiftwater at 839-7701.

Edward Lewis, a Times Leader staff writer, may be reached at 829-7196. Jen Marckini, a Times Leader staff writer, may be reached at 829-7210.

Deanna Null

February 06, 2008

SWIFTWATER (AP) — Authorities say a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were dumped along highways in the Poconos was supposed to be an alibi witness at a robbery trial.

Police say officers looked for 36-year-old Deanna Null at her last known address in Scranton on Jan. 24 but were unable to locate her. Five days later, her remains were found in trash bags strewn along Interstates 80 and 380.

Null didn't testify at the trial of a man who said he was with her at the time of a robbery he was accused of committing. A jury has convicted him.

State police Lt. Robert Bartal says police are receiving conflicting information from different witnesses concerning Null. But investigators say she is described as a transient with a history of drug-related convictions, who was known to go missing from time to time.

Hey Charlie:-)

This has nothing to do with the incident. She was going to testify to being with a guy who was accused of a robbery. She was going to help him out and support his alibi. Besides, he has been in jail since '06. I don't understand why anyone would write an article about this as if it had something to do with the latest incident.

BTW There is a much more informative article in the Times Tribune about this.

Police are trying to determine if the murder of Deanna Marie Null, the woman whose dismembered body was scattered along Poconos interstates, might be related to a drive-by shooting that occurred in Williamsport nearly six years ago.

No one was injured in the April 3, 2002, shooting that occurred outside Null's home on West Edwin Street, Williamsport police said. Several shots were fired from a car at a group of black men, one of them Richard Lowrie of Harrisburg, who police said was Null's boyfriend at the time.

State police investigators came to city police headquarters Tuesday to pick up the police report on the shooting, which police said was racially motivated.

Three white men were arrested in the shooting, and Lowrie testified at their preliminary hearing. Two of the men pleaded guilty to aggravated assault and were sentenced to state prison terms ranging from two to eight years. A third man pleaded guilty to tampering with evidence and was sentenced to a year in the county jail, according to court records.

The state Board of Probation and Parole in Harrisburg was unable to provide any information Tuesday on the status of the three men convicted in the shooting case.

"Null was not a victim. She wasn't even a witness in this case, but her boyfriend was a victim," Williamsport Police Patrolman Roy Snyder, the lead investigator in the shooting case, said Tuesday.

"She played no role whatsoever in the conviction of the three men," Snyder said of Null. Lowrie, however, was "a key witness and victim."

Parts of Null's dismembered body were found Jan. 29 in trash bags found at eight locations along Interstates 80 and 380 in Lackawanna and Monroe County. She was 36. Her identity was obtained through a forensic dentist in Allentown.

Both Null and Lowrie, believed now to be in his late 30s, were arrested in early February 2003 as part of a major cocaine-distribution ring that extended from Lycoming to Northumberland County.

Court records, filed by the state Attorney General's Office, alleged Null sold cocaine in Williamsport while Lowrie trafficked cocaine in Shamokin. Both were convicted of various drug crimes.

This story, sadly, is now becoming typical of our area. I'm inclined to predict that we are going to see much more of this type of horrific crime.

ing any part of the property.

It had to be a bitter disappointment for DeNaples, who's reign over the $400 million casino resort lasted only a little over three months before his suspension.

Anthony F. Ceddia was appointed trustee for Mount Airy. He is a retired president of Shippensburg University and is known to some board members.

"He is well known in the central part of the state, is extremely independent and has experience in complex, important management issues. His integrity is above reproach," gaming board Chairman Mary DiGiacomo Collins said.

The job of the trustee will be to assure the continuation of business at Mount Airy, according to a spokesperson for the board. Collins also said the trustee will be responsible for insuring that the conditions set forth by the gaming board are followed.

The board also appointed Mark M. Gleason, a forensic accountant, to set up and monitor controls to ensure the order is followed.

take money out," D'Amato said. And that could take a while, since the casino owner borrowed close to $400 million to finance the project.

D'Amato also said that although Mount Airy was doing well, it was operating at a net loss due to startup costs. Asked by board members about the morale at the casino since the suspension, D'Amato said it has been business as usual. But he added that the key change at the casino has been the lack of contact with DeNaples, who's participation D'Amato characterized as strategic rather than operational.

"We are just moving forward," he said.

"The board is relying on you on your independence and personal integrity," board member Jeffery Coy said, asking D'Amato if he could pledge that. "Yes, Sir. I pledge that for myself, my employees and my staff," D'Amato said.

D'Amato also told the board that DeNaples' daughter, Lisa, a vice president and key management member at the casino resort, would fully comply with the gaming board's order. DeNaples is not allowed to speak about casino matters with his daughter.

DENAPLES' ATTORNEY John Donnelly opposed the conditions set forth in the PGCB's order.

"This goes well beyond oversight. They've overstepped today. What we will do about it remains to be seen," he said.

DeNaples' attorney Richard Sprague attacked the evidence presented in the grand jury indictment. "I've been dealing with rumors for years. If you're a wealthy Italian, you're connected with the mob," Sprague told reporters sarcastically.

"I once asked him why he applied for the license," Sprague said. His reply was "I'd have a full investigation and have my name cleared," according to Sprague.

Sprague also suggested the charges against DeNaples were an attack on the gaming board's authority.

"The bottom line here is the state police wants to take over the investigative work for the gaming board and they have used DeNaples as a scapegoat to try to say the gaming board's staff did not do a good job," Sprague told reporters after the hearing.

THE UNANIMOUS VOTE by the board followed a hearing in which evidence was presented regarding DeNaples' recent perjury indictment by a Dauphin County grand jury and the temporary emergency suspension of his gaming license Jan. 30.

Mount Airy Chief Executive Officer Joseph D'Amato assured the board in his testimony of his and the management's ability to continue running Mount Airy and to follow the terms of the order.

"I've been licensed in four states and four jurisdictions. It's a privilege to work in this industry. It's not a right," said D'Amato. "We follow not only the letter but the spirit of the regulations."

The part of the order that requires all profits to be set aside will probably have little effect on DeNaples personally or the resort, because management can use any profits to pay down the resort's debt.

"Louis DeNaples hasn't taken out any money since I started over a year ago. It is his intention to pay down the debt, not

Tornadoes strike Ark., Tenn., Miss., killing 7

ATKINS, Ark. (AP) — Tornadoes tore across Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi on Tuesday, killing at least seven people and injuring dozens in a rare midwinter outbreak of violent weather.

A couple and a child were killed after a tornado touched down near the center of Atkins, a community of 3,000 along the Arkansas River in the central part of the state, the Pope County Sheriff's Office said.

Gov. Mike Beebe's office later said seven people were killed across the state, including in the communities of Clinton and Gassville.

On primary election day, at least one voting site in Atkins continued functioning as a Red Cross shelter after polls closed, Natasha Naragon, a spokeswoman with the secretary of state's office.

The power was knocked out briefly at a Little Rock conven-a coop attached to an outside garage. The dogs were matted with feces and appeared neglected."

Police entered the house and found garbage, dog and cat feces and rotting food strewn about the house, including where the children slept upstairs.

"There's so much clutter that you can hardly walk," Lenning told reporters on scene Tuesday evening.

The house has interior structural damage including holes in the floors, he said. In the basement, where the body was found, police also discovered what appeared to be a lab complete with tubes, beakers, syringes and unidentified chemicals.

Police contacted a state police forensic team, which arrived on scene from Harrisburg at about 2:30 p.m. to examine the lab equipment and chemicals removed from the basement. Tunkhannock Township volunteer firefighters also were called to the scene in case there was anything flammable.

"The forensic team doesn't think it was a narcotics lab, but is still making a final determination," Lenning said.

The family's three dogs are now with the SPCA, but the cats are still in the house, Lenning said.

Neighbors interviewed Tuesday described Brier Crest Woods as a peaceful community where police calls are rare and most of the residents keep to themselves, as did the deceased and his family.

Neighbor Ned Ramm, whose home is a few houses away, said the family was already living there when he moved to the development in 2002.

"I didn't know them by name, but they seemed normal enough," Ramm said. "I'd see him working on his motorcycle or truck outside and the girls would be in the yard. They seemed OK."

"My only concern was with their dogs being left outside and barking all night," he said. "Once, about two years ago, I went over there and knocked on the door to ask them to take the dogs in at night. No one answered the door."

John Lambert, who lives nearby on another street, also did not know the family by name, but said they seemed "nice enough."

"I was surprised when I passed by earlier and saw the police and firetrucks here," Lambert said. "You almost never see anything like that here."

"Null was not a victim. She wasn't even a witness in this case, but her boyfriend was a victim," Williamsport Police Patrolman Roy Snyder, the lead investigator in the shooting case, said Tuesday.

"She played no role whatsoever in the conviction of the three men," Snyder said of Null. Lowrie, however, was "a key witness and victim."

Parts of Null's dismembered body were found Jan. 29 in trash bags found at eight locations along Interstates 80 and 380 in Lackawanna and Monroe County. She was 36. Her identity was obtained through a forensic dentist in Allentown.

Both Null and Lowrie, believed now to be in his late 30s, were arrested in early February 2003 as part of a major cocaine distribution ring that extended from Lycoming to Northumberland County.

Court records, filed by the state Attorney General's Office, alleged Null sold cocaine in Williamsport while Lowrie trafficked cocaine in Shamokin. Both were convicted of various drug crimes.

license to build a casino at Pocono Manor. The plan included a controversial 25-story hotel on the historic resort property, located largely in Tobyhanna Township. Residents there opposed construction of a glitzy new hotel complex with slots, shopping and other features.

Pocono Manor and Mount Airy were among 13 applicants that competed for five Category 2 licenses for free-standing slots parlors with up to 5,000 machines. In December 2006, the gaming board awarded a license to Mount Airy but not Pocono Manor.

PMI appealed the gaming board's decision, which was unanimously upheld by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

The letter sent last Friday to the gaming board. The gaming board isn't required to respond to the letter, which offers no proposal for taking over the license. Pocono Manor may be laying the groundwork for a formal petition to the board as outlined in the state's gaming laws.

Gaming board Chairman Mary DiGiacomo Collins said that the board wasn't likely to consider PMI for the Mount Airy license.

TEMPLE U.

$5 million -- in the mail

PHILADELPHIA -- The checks to Temple University really were in the mail -- for $5 million.

It was a total surprise for the school to receive the anonymous donations, which arrived in a pair of nondescript envelopes sent via U.S. mail from a bank in Arizona, said Stuart Sullivan, Temple's senior vice president for institutional advancement.

One envelope contained a $1 million bank check for the university to use however it chooses, Sullivan told The Associated Press on Tuesday. The second held a $4 million check to endow a scholarship for women and minorities.

The envelopes were addressed to a development office staff member, who was completely stunned when she opened them on Thursday, Sullivan said. He guessed the donors must have found the staff member's name on a Web site or on a fundraising brochure.

The school contacted the bank to try to find out more, but the donors insisted on remaining anonymous, Sullivan said. They just asked for the school to give them periodic reports on how the money is being used.

The donations come at a serendipitous time, as Temple is the midst of its first-ever comprehensive fundraising campaign. With these gifts, the school has raised about $285 million of its $350 million goal, he said.

Temple enrolls about 35,000 students.

BOY IN A CAGE

Woman faces trial

WASHINGTON, Pa. -- A woman in southwestern Pennsylvania will stand trial on charges she locked a 10-year-old boy in her care in a feces-laden dog crate for about 90 minutes.

Rhonda Lehman, 51, of Washington, Pa., waived her right to a preliminary hearing Tuesday. She is charged with child endangerment and making terroristic threats.

Lehman put the boy in a 3-foot-by-4-foot plastic dog cage on Jan. 26 because he had been spiking his family's drinks with lamp oil and a multipurpose household cleaner, authorities said.

The boy laced the drinks because he was angry he didn't go on a family trip last year, police said.

The boy's 24-year-old brother also waived a preliminary hearing Tuesday and will be tried on simple assault and harassment charges for allegedly punching the youngster in the face after finding out about the tainted drinks.

Pennsylvania dispatches

Both Lehman and the boy's brother pleaded not guilty.

The boy lived with Lehman and his brother, but his exact relationship to Lehman is unclear. Authorities initially said she was his grandmother.

Lehman is represented by the public defender, who couldn't be reached for comment Tuesday evening.

Gary Graminski, the boy's brother's attorney, said the relationship was not relevant.

"If a member of your household is trying to poison you systematically, does it really matter how they are related to you?" Graminski told The Associated Press. "It doesn't affect any of the facts."

The boy is in the custody of the county's child welfare agency.

A district judge on Tuesday reduced bail for Lehman and the boy's brother from $25,000 to $10,000 each. Both were still in the county jail.

TRIAL WITNESS

Dismembered body

SWIFTWATER -- Authorities say a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were dumped along highways in the Poconos was supposed to be an alibi witness at a robbery trial.

Police say officers looked for 36-year-old Deanna Null at her last known address in Scranton on Jan. 24 but were unable to locate her. Five days later, her remains were found in trash bags strewn along I-80 and I-380.

Null didn't testify at the trial of a man who said he was with her at the time of a robbery he was accused of committing. A jury convicted him.

State police Lt. Robert Bartal says police are receiving conflicting information from different witnesses concerning Null. But investigators say she is described as a transient with a history of drug-related convictions, who was known to go missing from time to time.

Headline: Dismembered woman took risks for drugs  Scranton ex-boyfriend says he tried to pull her from perilous lifestyle.

In the weeks before she was slain and dismembered, Deanna Marie Null broke up with her boyfriend, Russell Cummings, over her drug use.

"I tried to get her out of it," Cummings said Tuesday, standing outside the St. Francis of Assisi soup kitchen. "But I couldn't." He had known her about a year, he said, and although she didn't usually take drugs in front of him, Cummings said he had seen her smoke crack cocaine occasionally.

Sometimes, he said, she'd arrange to buy drugs for people, pocket the money and not deliver the drugs.

"A couple times she robbed a couple guys. That I know. ... She knew it was dangerous," Cummings said.

Police have described Null, 36, as a transient, but she did make some friends.

"She was a sweetheart. She wasn't mean," recalled Sharon Nemeth, 48, who knew her from a neighborhood bar called The Melba.

Null's head and some body parts were found Jan. 29 in eight locations along Interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe and Lackawanna counties. At the time, no one knew who she was. The mystery ended Monday when state police released her name.

Also Monday, police said they were looking for a car that might have figured in Null's death. They described it as a blue or black Cadillac or Buick, from the late 1970s or early '80s, with a four- or five-strip chrome luggage rack on the trunk lid. It had a white license plate from an unknown state.

The car was last seen about two weeks ago at Olive and Capouse streets in Scranton, troopers said. The driver was described as black, 5 feet 9 inches to 6 feet tall with a short, military-style haircut and a stocky build.

Anyone with information about the case is asked to contact state police at Swiftwater at 570-839-7701 or 1-866-403-2946.

Null had a criminal record. In 2003, a state grand jury found she sold cocaine and crack cocaine to an undercover agent in 2001 and 2002 in Williamsport, where state police said she also had lived. The next year, she pleaded guilty to delivery of a controlled substance and conspiracy, according to Lycoming County Court records.

In 2004, she was sentenced to jail, and early the next year placed on work release. She had to pay a $1,340 fine, and paid the county intermittently from July 2005 through April 2007, court records show. But with no payments five months after that, the court on Sept. 21, 2007, issued a warrant for her arrest.

The court docket doesn't list other entries after that, indicating she was never jailed.

By that time, she had been in Scranton, according to Cummings and others who knew her.

Cummings said state troopers from Swiftwater found him Saturday night at N.J.'s, a center city Scranton bar that the regulars call Nellie's, and put him in a hotel room in the Poconos for the night. "They said I was too intoxicated," he said.

The next day, he said, troopers interviewed him for several hours and gave him a lie detector test, which he said he passed.

Police were unavailable Tuesday night to comment on that. Those who knew Null said state police have been in Scranton interviewing people for the last few days.

The investigation led troopers to another bar Monday -- The Melba, a corner hangout in a gritty area of the city's Pinebrook section. Over beers and front-page newspaper stories of Null's fate, customers talked about her Tuesday. Nemeth said she and Null sometimes drank together on the nearby railroad tracks.

It wasn't all good times for Null at the bar, though. She and Cummings were barred from The Melba at one point for stealing money and beer, bartender William Holland said. Customers said Null still stopped in when other bartenders were on duty to buy beer for takeout.

At the soup kitchen Tuesday night, Robert Naslanic said Null had a difficult time in the city. He said he met her accidentally one night in an apartment on Prescott Avenue where she had been staying. "She wanted to smoke crack, and I got it for her. We ended-up-having-sex," he said.

Naslanic said Null "had been struggling in Scranton for two years."

Back at The Melba, Mark Carter, 57, who lives next door, said troopers interviewed him about Null. "She was an everyday street girl. I can't put it any better than that," he said.

Woman found dismembered along highways was to be alibi witness

Authorities say a woman whose severed head and dismembered remains were dumped along highways in the Poconos was supposed to be an alibi witness at a robbery trial.

Police say officers looked for 36-year-old Deanna Null at her last known address in Scranton on Jan. 24 but were unable to locate her. Five days later, her remains were found in trash bags strewn along Interstates 80 and 380.

Null didn't testify at the trial of a man who said he was with her at the time of a robbery he was accused of committing. A jury has convicted him.

State police Lt. Robert Barta says police are receiving conflicting information from different witnesses concerning Null. But investigators say she is described as a transient with a history of drug-related convictions, who was known to go missing from time to time.

The search for clues in the case of a dismembered woman is getting a boost with a reward offered by Monroe County Crime Stoppers.

The group has named the murder of Deanna Null as its "Crime of the Week."

Pennsylvania State Police at Swiftwater is investigating the homicide where Null's remains were discovered at about 9 a.m. Tuesday, Jan. 29, by Pennsylvania Department of Transportation workers in the median strip of Interstate 380.

After the original discovery, a search of the surrounding area was conducted and seven more bags of body parts were located along Interstates 80 and 380 in Coolbaugh, Pocono, Tobyhanna, Stroud and Covington townships.

Null, 36, lived in both the Scranton and Williamsport areas.

Doctor who ID'd body parts victim has been at roots of probes for years

By BETH BRELJE

Pocono Record Writer

Dr. Dennis Asen, forensic odontologist, has been taking a bite out of crime for 30 years.

Most recently, Asen used dental records to identify Deanna Marie Null, whose head and other dismembered body parts were found scattered alongside Interstates 80 and 380 in the Poconos.

Null's family contacted state police to report her missing last Thursday after noting the victim's description could match Deanna Null.

Victim identification is a major step in solving a murder. Asen X-rayed the jaws and matched the film to Null's dental records.

"It's very satisfying. You've just solved a puzzle. Not just me but everyone who brought all the pieces together," Asen said.

X-rays make it easier, but are not necessary to make an identification.

If a dentist has done some charting, Asen can make a match.

"There are 32 teeth and an infinite number of things that can happen to each tooth. It's almost like a 32-digit combination lock," he said.

A tooth could be rotated, have a filling, gold crown, chip or cap.

"The coincidence of having the same sequence can not be explained away by chance," Asen said.

In Null's case, some of her teeth were missing.

Sometimes forensics workers have no suggested identification on a victim. In those cases, information is compared to dental records of missing persons entered in the FBI's National Crime Information Center computer database.

The computer scans all the missing person cases, then offers the most likely matches. It was a useful tool in many high-profile cases Asen has worked on, including identification of victims from the downed plane in Shanksville on Sept. 11, 2001, and Hurricane Katrina.

A wad of gum is the star in what may be his most amazing story.

was tortured with a heated coat hanger and bleach before she was killed.

A detective noticed a piece of chewed gum on the ground and thought it could belong to one of the killers.

The gum was frozen to preserve the shape. Asen made impressions of the tooth mark and an impression of a suspect's mouth. "The pattern fit together like a lock and key," Asen said.

Today that suspect, Cory Maeweather, is serving a life sentence for murder.

Forensic odontologists like Asen are among the few who are invited to suspicious-death autopsies.

Rarely, when there is a bite on a person's body, Asen is called to the scene of the crime. Immediate inspection of the bite pattern is necessary because wounds can change appearance quickly in the living and deceased. Sometimes an attacker will have a defensive bite mark from a victim.

Telling the stories of the dead helps bring answers and closure to the living. The work puts forensic odontologists in on the front line of life's most disturbing scenes. How do they cope?

"It is sad. But you don't think about it until after you do the job. Afterwards, these thoughts seep in. At mass disasters, it doesn't connect in the mind right away. It does about an hour after you leave. You are distracted away from the emotion by your job," Asen said.

When not working on a forensic case, Asen practices dentistry with Professional Dental Associates in Walnutport and Asen and Associates in Allentown. He has written two crime novels, "Deadly Impression" and "Root of Deception."

Jackson Twp. murder trial begins today

STROUDSBURG — The bench (non-jury) trial starts today for a Jackson Township man charged with fatally shooting his employee who visited him at his home in August 2006.

The trial for Ray Velez, 36, was supposed to start Tuesday, but there was a 24-hour medical delay due to Velez's defense attorney being ill.

Velez says he shot Armando Guardiola, an employee of the New Jersey trucking company he owned at the time, in self-defense when Guardiola threatened him. Guardiola and two other employees were visiting Velez at his Wellington Road home when an argument occurred with Guardiola over workers' compensation, witnesses said. Velez stayed on scene after the shooting until police arrived.

Hampton's rent hike for polling 'annoyed' area voting director

Pocono Record named new site

By DAVID PIERCE

Pocono Record Writer

It's not only costly to run a campaign, it's expensive to hold the election itself.

So expensive that the Monroe County Voter Registration Office decided not to conduct the April 22 primary and November general elections for Stroudsburg's Fifth Ward voters at the Hampton Inn on Eighth Street. This is because the Hampton decided to raise its one-day rent for the polling place from $200 to $750.

Voter Registration Director Sara May-Silfee said she learned of the rent increase after the Hampton returned the county's verification form, with the hotel's new rental fee handwritten on the form.

"I almost fell off my chair," Silfee said.

Silfee contacted the Hampton's Mary McPherson, who confirmed the rent had gone up.

More online:
www.poconorecord.com
For more on local political news, go to www.poconorecord.com/politics.

"She just said that's their meeting room charge," Silfee said. "I was very annoyed, to say the least. I don't have that kind of money."

McPherson didn't return a call seeking comment.

But voters in the South Stroudsburg voting district have a new polling site: Pocono Record offices on Lenox Street, just across the Broad Street bridge from the Hampton.

Pocono Record Publisher Jim Maxwell said he offered to host the voting for free after the problem came up during a conversation with Silfee about a get-out-the-vote drive.

"I asked if there's anything wrong with our facility," Maxwell said. "I thought we could help out the county, help out the elections board."

Silfee said the newspaper was an acceptable location.

"We typically don't charge any of the civic groups that use our facility," Maxwell added.

If you thought free use of municipal buildings, churches and fire halls as temporary voting sites is the norm — perhaps out of some sense of civic duty — you'd be mistaken.

The county pays rent for nearly 40 of its 50 polling districts, Silfee said, at a total cost of $5,090.

"It ranges from $10 all the way up to $200," Silfee said. "The fire companies we tend to pay, but they don't charge a lot either."

One church charges $250 to host voting and a Bartonsville motel charges the county $200.

The rent covers facility usage and the cost of heating and lighting for the day, she said. The county incurs other costs for printing, hiring election workers and maintaining the voting machines.

Silfee would like to conduct voting in local school buildings, but she says the county's four districts haven't been receptive to the idea. She said state elections law actually encourages the use of schools for voting.

"Other school districts in the state of Pennsylvania are doing it," Silfee said.

Pa. primary could be the 'decider' for Democrats

By DAVID PIERCE

Pocono Record Writer

Democratic supporters of Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton and Barack Obama will Wednesday start their campaign on Super Tuesday, highlighting the prospect that the state's primary will be crucial in deciding the Democratic presidential nomination.

Meanwhile, the state's GOP will be looking for a challenger to Sen. John McCain, who will emerge as the presumptive nominee long before the April 22 primary. And former Gov. Tom Ridge, a national vice-presidential pick, is rumored to be planning to meet with members of the legislature on Wednesday when they gather in Harrisburg to select their next speaker.

"I don't think endorsing a McCain would be a bad thing," said Sen. Michael J. Cella, who chairs the Senate Committee on Governmental Operations and is expected to make an endorsement speech when he returns to the state capitol.

Political observers and the state's media are predicting a tight race between Clinton and Obama, with Clinton's lead in the polls being questioned by the state's media.

"We could be a decisive swing state," said Sen. Bruce A. Cook, a Democrat who chairs the Senate Committee on Governmental Operations.

Mt. Airy's wagers fall; payout rate leads state

Gaming revenues fell sharply last week at Mount Airy Casino Resort, but a Friday ice storm and the prior week's strong performance had a major impact on the numbers.

The casino generated wagers of $37.6 million, off from $41.7 the week before. Mount Airy continues to lead the state in the highest payout rate to guests, widening the gap among the state's five other slots parlors.

In fact, Mount Airy's payout rate rose significantly from the week before. Payout rates are controlled by the individual casinos. Pennsylvania requires the rate to be at least 85 percent. Mount Airy has said in the past it sets its payout high to build a loyal customer following and compete with Atlantic City casinos.

A massive ice storm Friday made driving in the county difficult, weakening the casino's figures for the day. And the extended Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend helped boost the prior week's betting figures, making a comparison with last week difficult.

Despite the weather last Saturday, Mount Airy set a record for its highest single-day performance since opening, with wagers topping $11.7 million. The resort has averaged about $38 million in weekly wagers since it opened in October 2007.

The state's slots operations generated $327.3 million in total wagers for the week, a 4 percent increase. That amounted to $14.3 million in gaming tax revenues for the week. Mount Airy contributed about $1.3 million, with approximately $23,436 going directly to Monroe County.

Family can sue dispatchers over love-triangle slaying

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The family of a man slain by a fired 911 dispatcher can sue the killer's co-workers, who allegedly looked up the victim's records for their colleague shortly before the triple murder, a federal appeals court ruled.

The family of Mark Phillips, of Carnegie, can argue that Allegheny County employees endangered him through their actions, the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court ruled Tuesday, reviving the suit.

Michael A. Michalski is serving life in prison for killing ex-girlfriend Gretchen Perderbar, 18, her sister, Linda Perderbar, 27, and the 24-year-old Phillips, her new boyfriend, on Oct. 29, 2003. Michalski had just been fired from the county 911 center after looking up Phillips' vehicle and license-plate records himself.

Soon afterward, a distraught Michalski called co-workers to say he "had nothing left to live for" and that Phillips and Gretchen Perderbar were going to "pay for putting him in his present situation," the court opinion said.

Police arrest woman who baited men to 'hang out'

When she got victims to show up, they were attacked

By ADAM McNAUGHTON
Pocono Record Writer

A Tobyhanna woman is in jail on charges that she twice lured men to houses where other men would attack and rob them.

Michelle Winfrey, 18, was arrested on Tuesday after Pocono Mountain Regional Police linked her to two attacks dating back to November 2007.

"We interviewed her several times after the first incident," said Detective Sgt. Chris Wagner. "Then, come January she's involved in the same kind of incident where she's calling the victims beforehand. That was enough to charge her."

The first attack came on Nov. 13, 2007, when Winfrey called 18-year-old Scranton resident Jonathan Pagan and asked him to come "hang out" at her house at 2468 Highland Terrace in A Pocono County Place in Coolbaugh Township.

When Pagan and Demetrius Jamel K. Brown of Scranton got to the house around 2:30 a.m., they were attacked and beaten with a large stick or tree branch by 21-year-old Tobyhanna resident Jason Osby and an unknown man.

Pagan was robbed of money after being knocked out during the attack and had to spend several days in the hospital.

Just more than two months later, police say Winfrey again called two men to come "hang out," this time at a Tunkhannock Township home.

On Jan. 24, she called to invite Ivan Bannister and Derek Dunston, both of Blakeslee, to come to the house of Jamaal Wells, 24, at 4 Mountain Terrace Road in Blakeslee.

When they showed up to the house around 2 p.m., they were robbed at knifepoint by Wells and Blakeslee resident Stanley Firmin, 19.

Detective Wagner said it was unclear if victims knew whose house they were going to and they may have thought they were going to Winfrey's house.

But after both sets of victims identified her as the caller, police decided her involvement was more than a coincidence.

"We questioned her several times after the first incident since it happened at her home," Wagner said. "We were up in the air over whether or not she was a witness or a conspirator."

"Once we had her involved in the same kind of robbery in January, we had a pattern and that was enough to decide to arrest her," he added.

Winfrey was charged with robbery and two counts of criminal conspiracy to commit robbery for her role in the attacks. She remains in the Monroe County Correctional Facility on $25,000 bail.

Two of the four attackers, Jamaal Wells and Jason Osby, have been arrested. Wells was charged with motor vehicle robbery, robbery, criminal conspiracy and other related charges and has been released on $50,000 unsecured bail.

Police have issued warrants for Jan. 24 attacker Stanley Firmin and Karina Whitfield, 18, of Tobyhanna, an accomplice who drove to pick up the attackers after they vandalized and dumped the stolen vehicle.

At the time of the second attack, Winfrey was out on bail on charges of stealing almost $100,000 worth of jewelry from the Kmart in Mount Pocono, where she was employed between September 2007 and last month.

"We've had a few run-ins recently with Miss Winfrey," Wagner said. "These incidents have had us talking to her pretty often lately."

Wagner said police have not interviewed Winfrey or Wells to get their sides of the stories and will not be able to until they have lawyers.

Toll Brothers' first-quarter revenue dips again

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Over a year ago, the chief executive of luxury-home builder Toll Brothers Inc. thought the housing slump could be touching close to the bottom.

These days, the normally chipper Robert Toll bears much grimmer news — he still doesn't see "much light at the end of the tunnel" in the housing malaise.

On Wednesday, Toll Brothers said home building revenue fell by 22 percent in the first quarter, its seventh consecutive quarterly decline. Toll said that despite historically low mortgage rates and falling home prices, a slowing economy could be spooking buyers.

"Buyers seem to be hiding," Toll said. "The market's problem is a lack of confidence, not just regarding the direction of home prices, but ... the overall economy."

Home building revenue fell to $842.7 million in the period spanning November to the end of January, compared with $1.1 billion a year earlier, according to the preliminary report.

Revenues in Florida, the Carolinas, Texas and, in 2008, Georgia, saw the biggest decline at 44 percent to $138.9 million. The company began operating in Georgia only in 2008.

The Mid-Atlantic and West states were tied at a 24 percent decline — to $250 million and $227 million, respectively — while the North saw an increase of 7.5 percent to $227 million.

Doctor who identified body parts victim has been at roots of probes for years

By Beth Brelje
Pocono Record Writer
February 07, 2008

Dr. Dennis Asen, forensic odontologist, has been taking a bite out of crime for 30 years.

Most recently, Asen used dental records to identify Deanna Marie Null, whose head and other dismembered body parts were found scattered alongside Interstates 80 and 380 in the Poconos.

Null's family contacted state police to report her missing last Thursday after noting the victim's description could match Deanna Null.

Victim identification is a major step in solving a murder.

Asen X-rayed the jaws and matched the film to Null's dental records.

"It's very satisfying. You've just solved a puzzle. Not just me but everyone who brought all the pieces together," Asen said.

X-rays make it easier, but are not necessary to make an identification.

If a dentist has done some charting, Asen can make a match.

"There are 32 teeth and an infinite number of things that can happen to each tooth. It's almost like a 32-digit combination lock," he said.

A tooth could be rotated, have a filling, gold crown, chip or cap.

"The coincidence of having the same sequence can not be explained away by chance," Asen said.

In Null's case, some of her teeth were missing.

Sometimes forensics workers have no suggested identification on a victim. In those cases, information is compared to dental records of missing persons entered in the FBI's National Crime Information Center computer database.

The computer scans all the missing person cases, then offers the most likely matches. It was a useful tool in many high-profile cases Asen has worked on, including identification of victims from the downed plane in Shanksville on Sept. 11, 2001, and Hurricane Katrina.

A wad of gum is the star in what may be his most amazing story.

In the summer of 1996, police found 13-year-old Richezza Williams' remains stuffed into a box in an Easton Cemetery crypt. The New York runaway was tortured with a heated coat hanger and bleach before she was killed.

A detective noticed a piece of chewed gum on the ground and thought it could belong to one of the killers.

The gum was frozen to preserve the shape. Asen made impressions of the tooth mark and an impression of a suspect's mouth. "The pattern fit together like a lock and key," Asen said.

Today that suspect, Cory Maeweather, is serving a life sentence for murder.

Forensic odontologists like Asen are among the few who are invited to suspicious-death autopsies.

Rarely, when there is a bite on a person's body, Asen is called to the scene of the crime. Immediate inspection of the bite pattern is necessary because wounds can change appearance quickly in the living and deceased. Sometimes an attacker will have a defensive bite mark from a victim.

Telling the stories of the dead helps bring answers and closure to the living. The work puts forensic odontologists in on the front line of life's most disturbing scenes. How do they cope?

"It is sad. But you don't think about it until after you do the job. Afterwards, these thoughts seep in. At mass disasters, it doesn't connect in the mind right away. It does about an hour after you leave. You are distracted away from the emotion by your job," Asen said.

When not working on a forensic case, Asen practices dentistry with Professional Dental Associates in Walnutport and Asen and Associates in Allentown. He has written two crime novels, "Deadly Impression" and "Root of Deception."

This is a very interesting aspect in the forensics. Thanks for the info. I just thought the one line, "Not just me but everyone who brought all the pieces together," Asen said., was just a little creepy in this case.

On a train tressel above the corner where Deanna Marie Null was last seen, there is a ragged community created by the city's largely invisible homeless and transient population.

Empty beer bottles lay strewn among tents made of rags. A handleless clock hangs from a tree.

Time is relative here.

The 36-year old who lived between Scranton and Williamsport spent a lot of time on the tracks above Olive Street and Capouse Avenue, friends said recently. Despite the stark risks of a life spent in some of the city's toughest bars, many described her gruesome murder as a shock.

"She came down on the tracks, she would drink with me," said Dennis Ingle, who is known on the street as "Irish."

"I would tell her to go back to Williamsport, she didn't belong out here on the tracks."

The former Deanna Bryan graduated Williamsport Area High School in 1990. Her yearbook - with a photo of her clad in a pink sweater, dark hair coiffed - lists one extra-curricular activity: office aide. By the end of 1991, she had married a classmate, Brad Null, and given birth to a daughter. She and Mr. Null divorced in 1993.

After that, the details of Ms. Null's life in Williamsport are as elusive as the details of her death.

Capt. Raymond Kontz of the Williamsport Police said he recalled encountering her as a patrolman, but nothing about her stood out in his memory. Like Ms. Null, all of her former neighbors have moved on from Timberland Apartments on West Edwin Street. No one is left who knew her.

A woman who identified herself as Ms. Null's sister when answering the door at the Bryan home Tuesday said Ms. Null was kind-hearted, but tended to get involved with the wrong people. She did not elaborate, and declined to give her name.

A manila folder in the Lycoming County Courthouse on Ms. Null contains more than 100 pages of bench warrants, criminal complaints and sentencings. Most of the documents revolve around her arrest for the sale and possession of cocaine. Her swirling signature marks a 2003 guilty plea, after which she served a stint in Lycoming County Prison and was transferred to Clinton County Correctional Facility in February 2004.

The prison address was one of many for Ms. Null, who in court records listed three residences in Williamsport, along with addresses in Harrisburg and West Chester.

Dismembered woman had criminal past

Civil documents show she filed for child support in 1998 from Mr. Null. Within the next five years, she again petitioned for child support, this time for three children listed with the father as Richard Lowrie.

Nothing in the file explains how the former high school office aide and mother from Williamsport ended up living among the homeless, eating in soup kitchens and drinking on a train tressel in Scranton.

Ms. Null shared many 24-ounce cans of Hurricane High Gravity malt liquor with Dennis Ingle, who described himself as "hardcore homeless." He said he often saw her at the St. Francis of Assisi soup kitchen and the bars along a strip of Capouse Avenue - the Melba Bar, the Clubhouse, and the Jukebox, which has closed.

About two weeks ago, Ms. Null disappeared.

Russell Cummings, who said he was her boyfriend, was not surprised. Ms. Null had a habit of dropping out of sight from time to time. Sometimes, she would return to her parents' home in Williamsport, Mr. Cummings said. Other times, he did not know where she went.

"It didn't hit me yet," he said, tears welling in his eyes as he stared at her photograph. The last picture of her he looked at, he said, was presented by investigators seeking his help in identifying her.

"She took care of me, I took care of her," he said. "I would see her everyday, but she would go, she'd leave me."

They met at the Melba Bar in January of last year and were a couple off and on since. Mr. Cummings said the photograph of Ms. Null circulated in the media is outdated. He recently trimmed her bangs for her, he said.

In the past year, Ms. Null worked at Versacold Atlas Logistics Services, a distributor of frozen foods, and Labor Ready, a temporary labor contractor, friends said.

Mark Carter said he got her the job at Versacold last year, and spent enough time with her to know she was living a dangerous life.

"She wanted to be a big city girl, but she was a country girl," he said.

A drug habit led Ms. Null to prostitution when she was desperate, Mr. Cummings and others said. A review of court records turned up no record of Ms. Null being arrested for prostitution.

"She was doing tricks," Mr. Cummings said. "We used to try and get her out of it, but she was still doing it."

Whatever her circumstances, those who knew her said she always had a smile on her face.

"I think she was hiding up here," said Cherie Sakosky, a regular at Melba Bar. "She never stayed anywhere too long. She stayed with me two days. I didn't ask her to leave, she just left."

When she realized the dismembered victim on the news was the same woman who took refuge in her house last summer, Ms. Sakosky said she fell to her knees.

"That's how friendly she was, you would let her into your house," she said. "Her family needs to know we loved her, too."

Man Found Dead in Filthy House was ESU Honors Student

Pocono Mountain Regional Police and a state police forensic team are now investigating the circumstances surrounding the death of a 35-year old man inside his Tunkhannock Township home Tuesday morning. Police say Michael Petrullo's common-law wife found him unresponsive in the basement of their Brier Crest Woods home that was filled with garbage, animal waste, rotting food and some type of a laboratory in the basement. Petrullo was a chemistry honors student at East Stroudsburg University. Monroe County Coroner Dave Thomas says they conducted an autopsy today (Wed.), but the cause of death is pending the outcome of toxicology tests. Police say, two daughters, ages 12 and 14, were taken from the house and placed in protective custody because of the "deplorable living conditions". Detectives said the home was so cluttered inside, you could hardly walk. They also said there was structural damage to the interior, including several holes in the floor. The investigation continues and Petrullo's wife could face child endangerment charges.

(Sports) E-Burg So. Football Star will play in the Heartland

East Stroudsburg South High School football star Corey Lewis has made a decision on where he will play at the next level. During a signing ceremony this (Wed.) afternoon in the high school library, the all-state lineman announced he will play football for the "Fighting Illini" of Illinois University. Tomorrow (Thurs.) Jackie Terwilliger will announce her college plans, also during a signing ceremony in the school library. During her high school career, Terwilliger excelled in softball and field hockey.

K More Information Released on I-380 Murder Victim A

State police investigators say a woman whose severed head and other body parts were dumped along Interstates 380 and 80 in Monroe County, was supposed to be an alibi witness at a robbery trial. Officers looked for 36-year-old Deanna Null at her last known address in Scranton on Jan. 24th, but they were unable to locate her. Five days later, her remains were found in trash bags along a 15-mile stretch of 380 and 80. Null never ended up testifying at the trial of a man who said he was with her at the time of the robbery, and a jury later convicted him. The "Pocono Record" reports that Null was also indirectly involved in a drive-by shooting outside a house she shared with her boyfriend in Williamsport in 2002. Police said it was racially-motivated and three white males were later arrested and taken to trial. State Police Lieutenant, Robert Bartal says they've received conflicting information from different witnesses concerning Deanna Null, described as a transient with a history of drug-related convictions, who would go missing for long periods of time. However, he wouldn't elaborate as the murder investigation continues. Meanwhile, investigators say Null was last seen two weeks ago in Scranton, getting into a dark-colored, late 70's or early 80's Cadillac or Buick sedan, with a cloth or leather top and a chrome luggage rack on the trunk. The car was in good shape and had a white license plate. Police say the driver was a black male, 5 feet 9 to 6 feet tall, with a military-style haircut and a stocky build. Anyone with information should call 839-7701.
